Proposal Disclosed After Joint Chiefs Report to Truman On Tour of Bases

By Fitzhugh Turner
NYHT News Service

The White House and State Department are working on proposals to bolster Indo-China, Burma, Thailand and Indonesia with American arms and ammunition, it was learned yesterday.

Mr. Truman discussed the projects, presumably, with his Joint Chiefs of Staff, who reported to him yesterday morning after returning from a 10-day trip to the Far East. General Omar Bradley, chairman, the Joint Chiefs of the Army, Navy and Air Force and officials including Defense Secretary Louis Johnson and Undersecretary of State James E. Webb passed more than an hour in conversation with the President.

Details of their conversation were not disclosed, except that the Joint Chiefs studied combat efficiency and morale of troops in the Pacific, that they ordered on-the-scene consolidations which will save 6 to 10 million dollars at bases they visited, and that they will be called upon to testify on Capitol Hill. Senator William F. Knowland (R., Calif.) said their report will have a lot to do with future Congressional action relating to Communist advances in Asia and to United States defense preparations.

Dispatch of arms to the four southeast Asian countries would require no further Congressional action.

Clash Almost Daily

Of the four, Indo-China is most immediately threatened. It shares a common border with Communist China, and the West and the Soviet bloc already have squared off there behind rival governments of Viet Nam, the principal political subdivision. Communist forces under Ho Chi-minh, Soviet-recognized revolutionist, clash almost daily with forces of the French-sponsored Bao Dai régime.

In addition to military aid, Bao Dai's Viet Nam also is next in line in Asia for economic assistance from the United States. A 100-million-dollar Export-Import Bank loan to Indonesia was authorized here Friday, and Congress approved continued economic aid to Korea and the Chinese Nationalist government on Formosa. Viet Nam has not yet requested economic assistance, but inforced officials said Bao Dai has been told that a request would receive careful consideration.

Burma also faces Communist China across a common border, and also has been the scene of con-

High U. S. Official In Germany Tells Of Murder Threats

Stuttgart, Germany, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—A high-ranking United States official said today that he and several other Americans in the Stuttgart area have received anonymous murder threats during the past few weeks.

He said he had asked the military police for 24-hour protection for himself, his wife and their children, and added that he had learned that "several Americans in the Stuttgart area had received similar threats during the past few weeks."

He said he was "almost certain" that the threats were "directly connected" with American insistence that German officials lift the "news blackout" imposed on details of a recent denazification scandal here.

The official who told of the death threats asked that his name be withheld because "we are afraid publication might lead to a lot of crank calls, and possibly something worse."

D. C. Man Solves L. A. Bomb Scare

Trembling Police Await Blast As Mother's Vibrator Buzzes On

By Robert Thompson
Post Reporter

A Justice Department attorney, who admits he might use a vibrator to promote growth of his hair, solved a cross-country bomb scare last night.

Simultaneously with Los Angeles police, he disclosed that a buzzing suitcase contained only his mother's battery-connected vibrator, and not an atomic or other bomb.

He is H. S. Harrison, who lives at 2005 N. Upland st., Arlington.

By the time he reached home and made the disclosure:

1. More than 20 Los Angeles police stood guard for hours over the suitcase in a remote corner of the Los Angeles airport waiting for it to explode. They were assisted by Army ordnance experts who were called in.

2. Special portable X-ray and fluoroscope equipment was wheeled into action to determine contents of the buzzing suitcase. The equipment disclosed some wires and a Los Angeles police bomb "expert" said that "by God, there's a detonator in this thing."

3. More than 20 newspapermen and photographers stood around for eight hours with police at a respectful distance, waiting for the suitcase to blow up.

4. Harrison, with his mother, Mrs. Sarah B. Harrison, arrived at Newark (N. J.) airport at noon and he "raised hell" with American Airlines officials because his mother's bag, contining the vibrator, had not arrived on the same plane.

GOP Attacks 'Socialism' of Democrats

Stassen in Lincoln Dinner Talk Accuses Opposition Party of Pandering to Loafers

By The Associated Press

Republicans launched a concerted attack on the Truman Administration last night in their first full-scale barrage of the 1950 congressional campaign.

In Lincoln Day addresses all over the country, Republican leaders chose as their theme the "Liberty-Socialism" battlecry raised last week in an election-year statement of party policy.

Harold E. Stassen, president of the University of Pennsylvania, who lost in a bid for the presidential nomination in 1948, struck vigorously at Administration policies with a speech before a Young Republicans meeting in Springfield, Ill.—the town where Lincoln lived before becoming President.

Rejects Dixiecrat Merger

Stassen accused the Democrats, "either because of a sincere but mistaken belief in socialism or because of a cynical indifference to everything but victory at the polls," of pandering to "chiselers and loafers" with their social welfare programs. He added:

"Let us always have in mind that every attempt in the history of the world to establish a loafers' paradise has wound up in a dictators' hell-hole!"

He rejected talk of Republican merger with any anti-Truman Southern Democrats, declaring the rebuilt Republican Party must not tolerate "discrimination because of race, religion or ancestry in education, employment, shelter or justice."

He said the GOP cannot join with those Democrats "who seek to join with us partially to protect economic freedom for themselves, but even more to deny true freedom to others in their midst."

In his prepared address, Stassen asserted that Administration policies are robbing men of their freedom.

Gabrielson on Like Note

"'Let the Government do it,' is the slogan," he said. Nationalization, Government ownership, blanket controls, price fixing, heavy taxes, governmental distribution of goods, and governmental operation of all or a major part of the economy are the methods of this school of thought."

He called on the Republicans to create "a dynamic, fighting party with this issue of the true freedom of man as our central rallying point."

The same note was struck by Republican National Chairman Guy G. Gabrielson in an address to party members at St. Louis.

"The question," he said, "is whether we shall remain in this country a free people in constant control of our Government, or whether we shall delegate to an all-powerful Federal Government with unlimited power to tax and spend, the rights to direct and operate our agriculture, industry, labor

'One Little Man to Another'

Washington's Water Purifier Tells Truman: Send Us Coal—Or Drink Mud and Like It!

A caustic telegram addressed to President Truman from "one little man to another" may have saved the District water supply system from contamination.

Last Tuesday, A. R. Dunning, treasurer of the Strasburg Lime Co., of Strasburg, Va., sent the telegram. It said:

"We hold the sole lime contract for both the Dalecarlia and McMillan filters which supply water to Washington. We have one week's coal supply. As one little man to another, I suggest you invoke the Taft-Hartley Act or drink mud and like it."

At the same time Dunning sent another telegram to Senator Willis Robertson of Virginia. Even more acid, it said:

"Lack of coal forces us to shut down this week. We hold the sole contract for furnishing lime for treatment of all water used in the District of Columbia. If Harry wants to drink dirty water it is OK by me. I hope he chokes."

Dunning told The Washington Post yesterday that following publication of his telegrams in the Clarke (County) Courier, he received offers from coal companies of five carloads to be shipped via the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. The first car, he said, was confiscated by the road to operate its locomotives, but more cars are coming. Meanwhile, he said, he received some coal over the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, and by truck, giving him a 10-day supply.

District officials said there is no immediate scarcity of lime for filtering water here. And the White House, admitting receipt of the "little man" telegram, was noncommittal about what, if anything, had been done.

UMW Chief Asks Operators to Resume Negotiations Here On Wednesday

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

John L. Lewis yesterday reluctantly conformed to a Federal Court injunction and ordered his striking soft coal miners back to the pits on Monday.

Reports from the coal fields, however, indicated that many of the 370,000 strikers were in defiant mood and had no intention of ending the walkout, despite the court and Lewis' orders.

At Masontown, Pa., the Robena local, largest in the United Mine Workers, met and voted unanimously and vociferously to stay away from the mines despite the injunction. After UMW President Lewis ordered the men back to work, John Ozanich, leader of the Robena local, declared:

"Robena still says 'No!' We will not go back before we get a contract. Lewis didn't call us out and he can't tell us when to go back."

In Illinois, UMW District President Hugh White declared:

"As free Americans I doubt very much if the 24,000 Illinois miners will go back to work Monday."

There was similar defiant reaction among UMW leaders in the other mining States. In recent years the miners have twice defied similar injunctions and have paid more than two million dollars in fines.

Lewis, who predicted last week that his miners might balk at complying with a strike-ending injunction, told his field lieutenants via telegram that he had "no alternative" but to do as directed by the court.

John L. further conformed to the injunction—calling for resumption of collective bargaining—by inviting the operators to renew negotiations with him here Wednesday morning.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Hard coal miners, on a three-day work week, will get time and one-half for working Monday, observed as John L. Lewis' birthday.

The United Mine Workers leader will be 70 Sunday. Major coal producers agreed yesterday to the premium pay.

Prince Georges Bill Blasted As 'Politics'

Women Voters League Says Sothoron Measure Not True Home Rule

The League of Women Voters of Prince Georges County yesterday loosed a cannon blast at the Sothoron bill.

The league declared the bill is not a true home rule bill but instead is a "shrewd political stroke" by the "tightly-knit county political organization."

The league's target was a so-called home rule bill for the county introduced in the Maryland Legislature last Tuesday by State Senator L. Harold Sothoron, Prince Georges Democrat and key administration figure.

The board of directors of the league met yesterday and unanimously passed a resolution protesting the bill.

At the same time, the league repeated its request that the county commissioners order a survey of the organization and operation of the county government.

"The league still feels," said its board of governors, "that it is idle to undertake substantial reforms in county government until this survey is conducted, its findings published and the people given the opportunity (by referendum) to say what kind of government they want."

The league resolution said the "broader powers" to be given the county under the Sothoron bill "in no sense constitutes county home rule."

"Home rule," defined the league, "is a system of local government authorized by the people of a State in the State constitution whereby the people of one of Marylands counties can draft a charter

Gen. Clark's Former Aide Slain in Car

Kansas City, Kan., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—A 30-year-old Army major, former aide-de-camp to Gen. Mark Clark, was shot to death early today.

The body of Maj. John J. Luther, jr., was found in his automobile at an intersection in the Fairfax industrial district here.

Sheriff Roy Ferguson said there were three wounds in Luther's head. He said there was indication Luther had been beaten savagely on the head.

While serving as aide-de-camp to Clark, Luther squired his attractive daughter to numerous functions. His family reported from Clay City, Ind., that he was "a very close friend" of Patricia Anne and that he was the guest of the Clark family at their Fort Monroe, Va., home last New Year's.

Luther, who won numerous decorations in World War II, was in civilian clothes. His body was behind the wheel of his car, slumped toward the right. His feet still were on the pedals and the car was in low gear. The ignition was on. The card had skidded about 90 feet across an intersection.

His billfold and watch were missing, leading officers to surmise robbery was the motive.

Positive identification was made by Maj. Samuel Baker, who is attending the Command and General Staff College at Fort Leavenworth. Luther was taking a course at the college.

Albanian Barbers Forbidden to Trim Yugoslav Envoys

Lake Success, Feb. 11 (NYHT).—Albanian barbers have been forbidden to cut the hair of Yugoslav diplomats, so closely guarded are Albanian-Yugoslav relations in the Cominform-Tito feud, it was disclosed here today.

Every time Jaksa Petric, new Yugoslav delegate to the United Nations Security Council, wanted a haircut during his eight months' service in Tirana, he had to fly back to Belgrade.

Petric today disclosed there once was a formal Yugoslav protest over the haircut "barbarity," but the ban remained.

Homes of Yugoslav legation members were kept surrounded by police cars and motorcycles. When Petric sallied forth, a squad of Albanian motorcycle police—with the mufflers removed from their exhaust—went with him.

District Asks Release From Day Care Task

Commissioners Request Dropping of Program As City's Responsibility

District Commissioners have asked Congress not to continue the controversial day-care program as a District responsibility, it was learned last night.

Senate District Committee Clerk Gerhard P. Van Arkel said the request was made to a subcommittee which last May asked the Commissioners for specific recommendations for setting up the program on a permanent basis.

The war-born program has been a hot potato since the Federal Government withdrew its support in 1946. No District department wants the added burden.

Each year there is talk of discontinuing the day-care program or setting it up on a permanent basis. And each year it has been continued, on a year-to-year basis, in the Department of Public Welfare budget.

The program now cares for about 300 children from low-income families of mothers who must work. The 1950 appropriation was $100,000.

Van Arkel said he will consult this week with "interested persons" to determine if there is any other satisfactory means of operating the program.

"It seems unsatisfactory to have it in a department that doesn't want it," Van Arkel said. "Whether or not it can be set up independently, I don't know."

He said he thought the Senate District Committee feels the work should be continued. And he pointed out that Congress could add the program to the District budget despite District opposition. It has done it before.

No provision was made for the program in the District's 1951

Security Risks Kept in Jobs, Senator Says

McCarthy Tells Truman State Department Fired Only 80 Out of 300

Reno, Nev., Feb. 11 (AP).—Senator Joseph McCarthy (R., Wis.), today telegraphed President Truman suggesting that he ask the State Department for names of its employes who are "Communists."

The Senator, here for a Lincoln Day speech, told reporters he was going to make things "so politically inexpedient" for the President that he "will just have to clean out the State Department."

McCarthy in a speech Thursday night at Wheeling, W. Va., declared he had a list of 205 persons working in the State Department, who were known by the Secretary of State to be members of the Communist Party.

In Washington, State Department Press Officer Lincoln White said "we know of no Communist members in the department and if we find any they will be summarily discharged."

McCarthy today referred to the Presidential board appointed some months ago to screen State Department employes.

"While the records are not available to me, I know absolutely that of one group of approximately 300 certified to the Secretary for discharge, he actually discharged only approximately 80," McCarthy said in his message.

"I understand that this was done

Judge Rules Wife Gets Man's Body, Shipped Her COD

Providence, R. I., Feb. 11 (AP).—Judge Walter Curry today issued an injunction permitting a Seekonk, Mass., widow to get the body of her husband, Frank Mellen, which a South Hill, Va., undertaker had sent COD.

The undertaker, the Crews funeral home, had sent the body with instructions to the express company to collect $820 plus carrying charges. Otherwise, the undertaker stipulated the body was to be returned to Virginia for burial in a potter's field.

The widow's lawyer said the undertaker had made no arrangements with the family and that delay in proper funeral arrangements might result in a health menace. He said the undertaker had been given the choice of accepting a "fair price" for the casket, or having it sent back.

H-Blitz Might Kill Millions, Scientist Says

Government Activities Should Be Dispersed, Dr. R. E. Lapp Advises

By the United Press

Dr. Ralph E. Lapp said last night that a hydrogen bomb blitz could wipe out this country's major cities and kill 10 to 15 million Americans in one day.

Lapp, who worked on the atomic bomb during the war and has since been a consultant in nuclear science to various agencies and institutions, deplored official secrecy about the H-Bomb.

He said the people should be given "a prospectus on the H-bomb" with the "simple facts about H-bomb effects."

He also urged the Government to "spark" dispersion of industries and limitation of the size of cities by decentralizing its own agencies.

He said the Pentagon should be cleaned out and used only for "dead records." The Senate, he suggested, should meet in Alexandria, Va., and the House in Bethesda, Md.

Divorce Provides Next-Door House Be Built for Wife

Knoxville, Tenn., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Building contractor Stuart Fonde was granted a divorce today with the provision that he build his wife a home next door to his own.

Fonde had charged in his divorce bill that his wife was always dissatisfied with the present home.

In her answer, Mrs. Fonde said she loved her husband and their three children and wished to keep the family together.

The property settlement provided that the cost of the new house was not to exceed $12,500 and the parents agreed that the children, 12 to 19 years old, may decide with which one they wish to live.

Both trains were traveling at 45 miles an hour. One reportedly went through a stop signal.

Steward Swept Out of Plane 8000 Feet Over Long Island

Eastern Man Clings Until Craft Lands

St. Petersburg, Fla., Feb. 11 (AP).—A steel-nerved airline steward was drawn through the door of a plane today by suction, but was saved as he grabbed onto the ship on the way out.

Marc Fisher-Galati, 28-year-old former paratrooper from Miami, clung to the Eastern Air Lines plane for about 10 minutes while the pilot picked out a place to land.

The ship was on a Miami-Chicago flight and was at 2000 feet above Tampa Bay when the plane door suddenly burst open.

Fisher-Galati said he grabbed for the door handle and hooked his right leg around a chain and held on head down. A single passenger saw his plight and alerted the pilot.

Co-pilot J. S. Davis rushed back to hold to the steward's leg while Pilot H. L. Alford landed the ship at the municipal airport here.

Veteran Meets Death Trying to Close Door

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—A 28-year-old flight steward was jerked or blown from a transatlantic strato-cruiser 8000 feet above Long Island early today and plunged to certain death.

Passengers on the Pan-American pressurized double-decker, strapped in their seats, watched stunned and helpless as he disappeared into the darkness through an accidentally opened door he was trying desperately to close.

The victim was John Harris of New York, a recently married war veteran.

Some theorized he was pulled out by the sudden draft, while others thought he was pushed out by the higher pressure in the cabin.

The four-engined strato-cruiser was roaring in from London at 200 miles an hour when the steward plunged out at 1:48 a. m. The 22 passengers were strapped in their seats in preparation for landing at Idlewild Airport.

"I felt a sudden gust of wind," said Mrs. Anna Karjicek of St. James, N. Y., one of the passengers. "The steward was standing near the door. Just like a flash, the wind blew him out. He gave a long gasp or cry. . . ."

Coast Guardsmen searched for the body in Long Island Sound while police and volunteers combed a wide area around St. James, on Long Island's north shore 45 miles east of the airport.

Harris' survivors include his recent bride, Katherine, and his mother, Mrs. Chrisso Harris of Lafayette, Ind. He went to Greece as a youth, served with the British intelligence for several years of the war, and later served in Italy and Trieste with the United States Eighty-Eighth Infantry Division. He attended the University of Pennsylvania in 1948 and 1949.

Second Cabinet Aide Missing

East Zone Foreign Minister Reported Under House Arrest

Berlin, Feb. 11 (AP). — George Dertinger, the East German Foreign Minister who tried hard to please the Russians, was on the missing list tonight.

The 48-year-old Christian Democrat was reported either under house arrest by Communist police or recuperating in mysterious seclusion from a heart attack.

Gerhart Eisler, press chief of the East German Republic, insisted: "Dertinger falls into the same category as Grotewohl's 'suicide.' Both are alive and happy as long as they don't have to read Die Welt."

Die Welt is the British-controlled newspaper that reported Dertinger's arrest.

Grotewohl is the East German Prime Minister on a mysterious sick leave for a month. The West Berlin press at one time reported he was a suicide.

Three non-Communist members of Dertinger's staff, his secretary, personal assistant and his chief of protocol, also were reported under arrest on charges of being agents for American and British intelligence.

The ministry files were reported ransacked for evidence of espionage.

Dertinger's last known official mission was to call on Gen. Vassily Chuikov, Soviet chief of East Germany, and Russian Ambassador Vladimir Semionov last Monday.

6½ Times Faster Than Sound

4960 m.p.h. Wind Speed Sets Record at Naval Laboratory

A new record air speed of almost 5000 miles an hour was set last Thursday within the large-size wind tunnel of the Naval Ordnance Laboratory, at White Oak, Md.

The new record, six and one-half times the speed of sound, shatters the same tunnel's previous record of slightly better than five times sound's speed, established November 24, 1948.

NOL officials announcing the feat said it was accomplished in special efforts to determine if nozzles for the White Oak tunnels could be designed to provide practical tests for missiles at speeds higher than the old record.

Last Thursday's "blow," they said, was accomplished by padding the air nozzle that set the former record with brass plates to further constrict the airstream where it enters the testing chamber of the wind tunnel.

Greater air speeds than Thursday's have been recorded in various wind tunnels throughout the country. These were accomplished in tunnels of relatively small test-chamber size, whereas the NOL tunnels, with a test-chamber 16 inches square, are the largest tunnels to attain such high speeds.

Thursday's speed, officially 4960 miles an hour, was computed by translating the conditions within the test chamber to standard, sea level conditions.

Hungary Plans Severe Penalty for Vogeler, Sanders

Budapest, Hungary, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Vice Premier Matyas Rakosi said in a speech published today that American businessman Robert E. Vogeler and his British associate, Edgar Sanders, would receive "severe punishment" for alleged espionage activities in Hungary.

Rakosi made the statement yesterday before the Communist Party's central committee after the government ordered Vogeler, Sanders and five Hungarians to stand trial here February 17 on espionage charges.

He said the United States and Britain tried unsuccessfully to "rescue their spies with threats" and added:

"We reject with contempt their viewpoint, according to which arrest of American and British spies becomes a violation of rights of freedom or democracy."

Ex-Swedish Envoy To U. S. on Trial On Spy Charges

Stockholm, Feb. 11 (AP).—A member of a prominent Swedish family is on trial behind closed doors on charges of espionage—accused of offering data on Sweden's vital power plants to a representative of an unidentified foreign country, a court official said today.

Identified as Goesta Mittag Leffler, 39, he pleaded innocent in a Stockholm Magistrate's Court. He faces a six-year prison term if convicted.

In his plea of innocent, Leffler said existing publications contain similar material.

Mental examination of Leffler delayed court proceedings. The trial will probably continue until Tuesday, the verdict to be announced later next week.

An adventurer, Leffler enlisted in the Scots Greys during World War I. He later was Assistant Consul General in San Francisco.

2 Russian Vessels Arrive in U. S. Maneuver Waters

San Juan, Puerto Rico, Feb. 11 (AP).—Two Russian fishing vessels, heavily equipped with radio and radar devices, have entered waters where the United States plans its largest postwar maneuvers.

They are the 328-ton sister schooners Kometa and Osminog and are similar to ships that visited the Caribbean area last year when the United States Navy was staging smaller but important maneuvers.

The schooners arrived at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands, last Sunday and sailed for Panama Tuesday. Natives said they recognized sailors who passed through this area last year.

Coal Supply Lowest In History of U. S.

By The Associated Press

The Nation's fuel supply is at the lowest level in history.

Some communities in Idaho, Nevada, and parts of Washington and Oregon were reported out of coal. The situation is listed as "precarious" throughout the area.

Iowa Coal Administrator Rodney Selby said "brownouts" will be in order in some cities there unless the coal strike ends within a week.

Such curtailment of lighting already has been ordered in two Indiana cities. Hoosier Gov. Henry F. Schricker deferred ordering a State-wide brownout asked by State Fuel Commissioner Thomas R. Hutson.

The Buffalo, N. Y., coal conservation committee reported its dealers down to a six-day supply. Mayor Joseph Mruk said he is considering calling a state of emergency.

At Syracuse, five factories employing 150 expect to exhaust their coal supply by Tuesday.

Unemployment relating to the coal strike already has passed the 35,000 mark. Most of the idle workers are in coal-using railroads and steel companies.

Steel operations in Youngstown, Ohio, will be cut to 90 percent this week as a result of the coal shortage. Two of the district's three Bessemer converter plants, three open hearth furnaces and six blast furnaces have been taken out of production.

At Birmingham, Ala., the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Co., a U. S. Steel subsidiary, banked two blast furnaces and shut down a number of open hearths.

At Peoria, Ill., the distillery of Hiram Walker and Sons, Inc., halted grain mashing and allied operations to conserve coal, and 150 workers were furloughed.

Coal supplies of 10 days to two weeks are reported in Maryland, Nebraska, Tennessee, Minnesota, Virginia and Denver.

At Albany, N. Y., Governor Dewey initiated a State-wide voluntary system of pooling fast-dwindling coal supplies and said a state of emergency would be "inevitable."

Dewey appointed Bertram D. Tallamy, State superintendent of public works, as the State's solid fuel administration to direct the pooling effort.

The Governor acted shortly before Lewis directed his miners to return to work.

Tax Group's Study Shows Pyramid Structure

By Sigrid Arne
Associated Press Staff Writer

Perhaps if you own no property and get such a low wage that you pay no Federal income tax, you think you have escaped the tax collector.

The American Taxpayers' Association of Washington says that's a fool's paradise. You pay taxes at almost every level of income. But when you get down to the lower levels, the taxes you pay are hidden in the price you pay for things, right down to a loaf of bread.

This taxpayers' association is a 22-year-old group, kept up by contributions, which tries to tell citizens just how they are being taxed and what is being done with the money.

3 Families Keep Records

To figure out what the lower income families are paying in taxes, the association got three families to account for every penny they spent through one year

In each case they took a man and wife, with two children—the average American family. They took men who earned $960, $1800 and $2400 a year. None of them paid income taxes to Uncle Sam. Either they earned too little or their exemptions made it unnecessary. But they paid hidden taxes in the following amounts:

The man who earned $960 a year paid out $123.84 a year in taxes.

The man who earned $1800 a year paid out $243.

And the man with a $2400 income paid out $314.76.

The taxes that hit these families were property taxes (hidden in the rent, where they paid rent), excise taxes, licenses, import duties, and taxes included in freight costs.

78 Taxes on Quart of Milk

The association traced various things we all buy from the first step to the point at which we buy it. They found we pay:

78 different taxes on a quart of milk (the taxes just about represent the value of the cream on a bottle of milk).

151 taxes on a loaf of bread.

100 taxes on an egg.

125 taxes on a woman's cotton dress.

118 taxes on a man's suit of clothes.

154 taxes on a cake of soap.

201 taxes on a gallon of gasoline.

The association says:

Thousands of Miners Expected to Defy Lewis' Orders

Associated Press, a spokesman for George H. Love, president of the Pittsburgh Consolidation Coal Co. and chief negotiator for Northern and Western soft-coal operators, declared:

["There will be no question but what the operators will meet in accordance with the time and schedule established. And the mines will be ready for operation Monday."]

The head of the United Mine Workers also bowed to a second injunction, also issued yesterday, to drop four allegedly illegal contract demands, which have served to stymie negotiations for the past eight months.

Both injunctions were issued by Judge Richmond B. Keech at District Court here.

The jurist granted a 10-day "national emergency" injunction banning the walkout and ordering normal production of coal less than two hours after a special board of inquiry, activated by the President under the Taft-Hartley Act, reported to the White House that the Nation's health and safety were being imperiled by the strike.

The injunction, issued at 12:20 a. m. yesterday, named both the United Mine Workers and the coal operators as defendants, and in effect, ordered both parties to do all in their power to get the miners back and full production—"the orderly continuance of work as customarily scheduled"—going.

No Doubt About Five Days

Justice Department attorneys said there was no question but that the injunction called for production on the five-day week basis, and not the three-day work week in effect in the soft coal industry, on orders of Lewis, since early in December.

The injunction also directs Lewis and the operators to get together and resume collective bargaining "in good faith" for the purpose of resolving their eight-month-old dispute over a new work contract.

Judge Keech signed the emergency-type injunction without giving the United Mine Workers the opportunity to oppose it on the ground that "immediate and irreparable injury, loss and damage would result" to the Nation before a regular hearing could be held.

He granted the injunction for 10 days, to 11:20 a. m. February 21, and called a hearing on February 20 at 10 a. m., on the Government's motion to obtain the full 80-day injunction permitted under the "national emergency" clause of the Taft-Hartley management-labor relations act.

Little more than an hour after the injunction was issued, John L. Lewis was served with the restraining order at his UMW headquarters here by two marshals. Four hours later he ordered the miners back to the pits.

The Government backed up its plea for an immediate injunction with affidavits from Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer, Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson, Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman J. M. Johnson, Maritime Commission Chairman Philip B. Fleming, Secretary of Interior Oscar L. Chapman, Federal Power Commission Chairman Nelson Lee Smith and United States Surgeon General Leonard A. Scheele.

Report Main Document

The Government principal document—one required by the Taft-Hartley Act—was an eight-page report of the special board of inquiry set up by President Truman a week ago Saturday to investigate the coal dispute and report to him on the facts of the case. The Taft-Hartley Act, under which the fact-finding board was created, specifically prohibits the panel from making recommendations for settlement.

The fact-finders—David L. Cole, John T. Dunlop and W. Willard Wirtz—held that basically, the coal dispute was over the issues of wages and welfare funds, and that the other issues, while important and involving "issues of significant principle," have only served as "roadblocks" to genuine collective bargaining.

Four of these "roadblocks"—the "able and willing" clause and the "memorial period" clause through which Lewis could strike the miners at will; the union shop without complying with Taft-Hartley Act regulations; limiting of welfare funds benefits to UMW miners—were eliminated in another injunction signed by Judge Keech yesterday.

This injunction was issued under the "unfair practices" provisions of the Taft-Hartley Act, on the complaint of the operators and at the urging of Robert N. Denham, general counsel to the National Labor Relations Board.

The fact-finding board reported to the President that after holding hearings and observing negotiation sessions of the union and the operators, "the impression conveyed was that in long months of bargaining, the real issue in this case had never actually been joined."

Futhermore, the board reported, Lewis never did get around to telling the operators specifically what he wants, even though there was evidence the miners are seeking 95 cents a day in pay, for a total of $15 a day; and 15 cents more a ton royalties for the welfare fund, for a total of 35 cents a ton.

Added to Frustration

John L.'s vague attitude on the money issues, the panel observed, "contributed to the frustration of the bargaining. On the other hand, the board said, "this factor might have been neutralized" if the operators had not walked out of a bargaining session here on February 2 just when the UMW was proposing bargaining "without reservations." At the time, the operators insisted on certain "conditions precedent" to bargaining, including removal of the "able and willing" clause and denial of any new benefits which would raise the cost of coal.

As a result of unduly prolonging the "fencing stage" of their bargaining "into a period of national emergency," the operators and the union have built up resentments which make voluntary settlement the more difficult, the board reported.

"The American people are entitled to a contract stabilizing wages and working conditions in the coal industry, and to the coal they must have," the board stated.

"There is no justification for exposing the country to the harassments and progressively greater dangers that will flow from further delay.

"A full opportunity has been afforded the operators and the union to work out their own difficulties. A greater interest has now intervened. The obligation entrusted to the operators and to the union . . . to serve in a joint stewardship of these vital resources must be met. The health and safety of the Nation demand this."

Police Scout Attack Story of Admiral

Associated Press WIREPHOTO
ADM. ERIC LONGLEY-COOK
Thought he was under fire

London, Feb. 11 (AP).—The British director of naval intelligence raised a furore today—soon quieted by Scotland Yard and Uxbridge police—with a report that gunmen had shot at him from a speeding car.

What Rear Admiral Longley-Cook thought were bullets that smashed his windshield was only a stone, police authorities suggested. Moreover, the owner of the mysterious car "has been seen" and "everything is all right," they reported.

Longley-Cook created the sensation in the midst of a nation-wide counterespionage checkup touched off by the Fuchs atom spy case. He reported that two bullets from an American-made sedan crashed through his windshield about 10 a. m. as he and Mrs. Longley-Cook were driving on the main street of Uxbridge, on London's northwestern outskirts.

He Says He Gave Chase

He said he gave chase for nine miles before losing the speeding car at Acton, west of London.

The former gunnery adviser to the Admiralty could not be reached for comment tonight. The Admiralty took the position that the whole thing was a police matter.

Scotland Yard and the Uxbridge police, however, gave the case their undivided attention as soon as he reported the incident.

Only a few hours before it had been reported that Scotland Yard and operatives from MI-5, the special branch of military intelligence concerned with counterespionage, were engaged in their biggest drive since the war in checking up on the past histories of the thousands of workers engaged in atomic research.

This was reported a day after the preliminary hearing for Dr. Klaus Fuchs, German-born scientist who was said by the prosecution to have confessed giving Soviet Russia the most vital atomic secrets of the United States and Britain since 1942.

Due to Be Security Head

It was not known whether Longley-Cook was engaged directly in this counterespionage drive, but it was assumed he would be in charge of security for any atomic developments related to the Admiralty.

After investigators had examined the admiral's car, police at Uxbridge said "there are definitely no bullet holes in the windshield." A spokesman speculated the windshield might have been shatered by a stone thrown up from the road by the car he had chased.

Later, a police inspector at Uxbridge said the car had been traced by the license number obtained by the admiral and "everything is all right."

3 Given Death In Anti-Czech Assassin 'Plot'

Prague, Czechoslovakia, Feb. 11 (AP).—A Moravian state court at Jihlava today sentenced three men to death on charges of plotting to assassinate prominent leaders and overthrow the government.

Two other defendants were sentenced to life terms and 18 were sentenced to from 4 to 25 years.

The trial was the biggest of a series running almost continuously in the past several months. About 25 more of the same group are to go on trial in the same court Tuesday.

Those sentenced to death were Karl Vesely, 33, leather worker; Jan Tucek, 34, a textile businessman, and Frantisek Rod, 48, a tool machine operator.

The two sentenced to life imprisonment were Vavrinec Schwarz, 43, a worker, and Stanislav Barta, 40, a tool machine operator.

Blockade Used to Hamper Scrap Shipments, West Says

Berlin, Feb. 11 (U.P.)—The three western powers accused Russia today of using the "baby blockade" to interfere with scrap metal shipments from Berlin to western Germany while permitting such shipments to go to eastern Germany.

A formal protest from Berlin's three western commandants to the Russian commander said such restrictions would not be accepted and called them a violation of the four-power Paris agreement guaranteeing free access to Berlin.

East German Communists at the same time accused the west of trying to impose an economic blockade on the Soviet zone by banning steel shipments to East Germany.

Gerhart Eisler, East German government information chief, told a press conference in the Russian sector the prohibition of steel deliveries "presents a new blockade attempt." He said it supported the followers of West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer "who fall in love with the hydrogen and atomic bombs."

The Communist leader, who fled to Germany after jumping bail in the United States, charged the steel embargo was ordered as a result of U. S. High Commissioner John J. McCloy's recent conference in Washington.

The Soviet zone is known to be in dire need of iron and steel. Large shipments of east zonal steel to the Soviet Union and its satellite nations during the past four years have drained the East German economy to a near crippling point.

Failure to get steel probably would set back the Russian-sponsored two-year economic plan for East Germany.

Interference in Mo Plotting Is Hinted

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 11 (AP). — A young Navy ensign's counsel today implied that senior officers' interference caused his plotting of the battleship Missouri's course to break down shortly before she ran aground.

The officer representing Ens. E. R. Harris also drew testimony from the "Big Mo's" executive officer that:

(1) The 23-year-old assistant navigator was "one of the most competent younger officers aboard the ship," considering his age and limited experience.

(2) "A more senior" officer should have done the plotting as Harris had not been instructed concerning the secret electronic range the ship was trying to run when she grounded in Chesapeake Bay January 17.

This testimony was given at a Naval court of inquiry which yesterday named Harris "an interested party" in its grounding probe

The court can make Harris a defendant. He has been assistant navigator on Missouri since December and had only two days' previous experience in plotting a ship under way.

Defendants before the court are Capt. William D. Brown, Comdr. John R. Millett and Lieut. Comdr. Frank G. Morris.

The "Big Mo," her grounding damage repaired, will sail Tuesday to resume her interrupted training cruise to Quantanamo, Cuba.

$100 Million

Indonesian Loan Called 5th of Need

Jakarta, U. S. I., Feb. 11 (AP).—Indonesia's Premier Mohamed Hatta today said a 100-million-dollar U. S. loan announced last night for his government is a fifth of what he hopes to borrow abroad to finance his country's recovery.

Hatta said he had plans for a five or six-year development program for the islands requiring 500 million dollars in foreign loans.

Observers here viewed the loan as an impressive argument for Hatta to advance when he puts his economic plans before Indonesia's Parliament. The parliament opens its first session Wednesday.

stant fighting among government, Communist and other forces. Thailand has been relatively peaceful, but like more distant Indonesia has an internal Communist problem aggravated by Communist success in China.

Already Appropriated

The 75-million-dollar arms fund was appropriated at the last session of Congress for use by the President "in the general area of China." Neither the State Department nor the President asked for the money, and Mr. Truman has declined previously to use it for the Nationalist Chinese government. Officials familiar with the project to spend about half of the sum in southeast Asia declined to say in what proportion the arms would be split among the four countries.

The project, however, is one of the things to be discussed at Bangkok, Thailand, where American diplomats are scheduled to meet beginning Monday. Dr. Philip C. Jessup, the State Department's Ambassador-at-large, who has been touring the Far East, will be among those present.

Elsewhere on the Far Eastern front, Chinese Nationalist sources here reported that the Chinese air force has been bombing Communist-held Shanghai almost daily from island air bases. Chinese pilots are American-trained and they use American planes. A Communist radio report said the raid on February 6 was made by 12 four-engined B-24s, two twin-engined B-25s, two Mustang fighters and one P-38.

Damage Protested by U. S.

It was the February 6 raid which did damage of about six million dollars to installations of the American-owned Shanghai Power Co. and of the Standard Vacuum Oil Co., resulting in a United States protest. The State Department expressed "serious concern" over Nationalist attacks on clearly identifiable American property and further, over any attacks on densely populated areas. The Communists said the February 6 raid demolished more than 1000 houses, and in one area alone killed 200 persons and wounded 400. The State Department, in protesting such attacks, based the action on belief such raids could only benefit the Communists by the effect on non-Communist Chinese.

The Chinese embassy refused to comment on the protest, but an official said the Communists are moving toward confiscation of foreign holdings in China and that "in effect the Americans are complaining because the Nationalists are bombing property which the Communists are going to take over."

Britain, Israel in Pact

London (Sunday) Feb. 12 (AP).—The treasury announced today a British-Israeli agreement giving Israel right to spend 3 million pounds ($8,400,000) this year from her 30-million-dollar blocked sterling account.

Connally Says U. S. May Seek Atom Pact

By The Associated Press

Chairman Tom Connally (D., Tex.), of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said yesterday the United States "at an appropriate time" may try to reach agreement with Russian on control of atomic weapons.

This move probably would be made through the United Nations, he said, and not as a direct peace bid from the United States to the Soviet government.

Connally said he understood the State Department now is reviewing the entire sweep of American foreign policy.

Connally made it clear he strongly supports the policy of confronting Russia with power which has been set forth by President Truman and Secretary of State Acheson.

But he insisted their decision to make no new offers to Russia on control of atomic and hydrogen weapons has not closed the door to international agreement.

Acheson said agreements as such mean nothing to the Russians; that they adjust themselves only to strength, and that the United States' concern is to create strength in weak spots of the non-Communist world.

Connally, who has been in touch with Secretary Acheson in the past few days, authorized this statement:

"The President's directive to the Atomic Energy Commission to proceed with the building of the hydrogen bomb in no way closes the door to international agreement for the control of the hydrogen bomb, the atomic bomb and other weapons of mass destruction.

"The United States alone cannot determine international policy.

"At an appropriate time, the United States may, through the United Nations, make another attempt to secure an international agreement which would be effective and would provide measures for guaranteeing proper controls.

"Some stubborn nations may come to realize the importance of an agreement from their own standpoint. Meantime the United States must pursue that policy which it deems in the interest of national security and adequate national defense. These are the most vital of national interests."

Senator Cites Security Risks

after a lengthy consultation with Alger Hiss," the Senator said.

(Hiss, former State Department official, recently was found guilty in New York of perjury in denying he gave State Department secrets to a prewar spy ring.)

Asks Call to Acheson

"I would suggest, therefore, Mr. President, that you simply pick up your phone and ask Mr. Acheson how many of those whom your board labeled as dangerous he failed to discharge," McCarthy said in his telegram.

"The day the House Un-American Activities Committee exposed Alger Hiss as an important link in an international Communist spy ring, you signed an order forbidding the State Department's giving to the Congress any information in regard to the disloyalty or the communistic connections of anyone in that department."

McCarthy said that "despite this State Department blackout, we have been able to compile a list of 57 Communists in the State Department." He previously referred to this as a list of "card-carrying Communists."

He told the President "this list is available to you," and added:

"But you can get a much longer list by ordering Secretary Acheson to give you a list of those whom your own board listed as disloyal, and who are still working in the State Department."

The Senator said he believed "the minimum which can be expected of you in this case is to demand that Acheson give you and the proper congressional committee the names and a complete report on all those who were placed in the department by Alger Hiss."

Won't Reveal Names

McCarthy also demanded that the President revoke the order "in which you provided that under no circumstances could a congressional committee obtain any information or help from the Executive Department in exposing Communists."

McCarthy told reporters he does not believe President Truman would "knowingly support" a Communist in his Administration.

"The President is a politician, however," said McCarthy, "and he acts on political expediency.

"I intend to make things so politically inexpedient on this Communist issue that he will just have to clean out the State Department."

Asked why he would not make the list of 57 Communists public, McCarthy replied to reporters:

"You couldn't publish them, anyway."

"And besides, I would probably have 57 lawsuits on my hands, and since I can't get to the State Department records, I might not be able to prove that some of these people are actual Communists."

The names are available "to anybody who wants to do a little digging on the Hill" (Capitol Hill in Washington), he added.

Sister Kenny Bill Is Signed by Truman

President Truman yesterday signed legislation giving Sister Elizabeth Kenny, the Australian nurse, unlimited privileges for entering the United States as a temporary visitor.

Sister Kenny, who has developed a type of treatment for infantile paralysis, may now enter this country as often as she wishes, exempt from immigration requirements and fees.

Latest Marvels of Air Navigation Displayed at Commerce Building

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

For an injection of naked terror, drop around to the Institute of Navigation display in the Commerce Building.

"Our ultimate goal," said Gibson F. Guernsey, part-author of several of these instruments, "is to be able to send an unmanned plane over the enemy, drop a peanut which will destroy the enemy—and return the plane safely to base."

As to the question how near the Air Force is to this goal, Guernsey replied:

"Security forbids its answer, though we could answer very accurately because we know. Let us just say that I am 38 years old and that it is possible within our time."

Of course, he added, the destructive weapon might never actually reach the minute dimensions of a peanut. That size is just the theoretical goal.

Guernsey for ten years has been a civilian engineer with the Air Force at Wright Field, Ohio, and has been at engineering since age 16.

Around him in the Commerce lobby gleamed the black and steel and yellow-metal of the magic devices, some of them never before shown publicly. Navigation aides, most of them seemed to carry a split personality—dealers equally in life and death.

They would put a gleam in the eyes of Bowditch, pioneer navigation writer, as well as varying emotions in the soul of the layman whose interest in navigation is purely elemental.

There was the automatic radio compass, on which Guernsey was a project engineer.

Mix it with equal parts of plane and automatic pilot and you have a mechanical homing pigeon—can be sent exactly 1000 miles, for instance at which point it will do a U-turn and come home, or anywhere else you wish.

There is the wonderous "blind-landing" gear, still in the engineering stage.

Present devices make possible a blind approach to 50 feet above a fog-hidden runway.

But with the blind-landing gear the pilot can fold his hands at that point and the Force brings the plane in. As the explanation says:

"Realizing the last 50 feet are the most difficult and crucial, electronic engineers are now developing a glide path flareout (landing) to permit fully automatic landing regardless of weather or visibility.

"As the aircraft reaches a set altitude on its approach, altitude readings from the altimeter activate the flareout equipment.

"Signals from this new equipment, fed to the automatic pilot, gradually adjust the aircraft control surfaces as altitude descends, perimtting a smooth safe touchdown."

Remarkable, too, is the "omni-bearing distance navigation," which improves on present radar and lets the pilot know exactly where he is anytime.

It's a great day for the Bowditches and a mixed one for the Joneses in the Commerce lobby. The show continues today.

Private Naval Museum to Open Soon

Washington's first private naval museum will open the week after Easter, it was announced yesterday.

Historic setting of the Truxtun-Decatur Naval Museum at 1610 H st. nw., will be the former carriage house and stables of famous Decatur House on Lafayette square, two blocks from the White House. Workmen are now putting finishing touches on the conversion job.

The museum is named for two of America's naval greats, Commodores Stephen Decatur and Thomas Truxtun.

The house and buildings were built for Commodore Decatur in 1818. Later they passed into the hands of Truxtun Beale, a direct descendant of Commodore Truxtun.

Mrs. Beale still lives in Decatur House. From her the privately-sponsored Naval Historical Foundation got its long-sought site for a museum. A 50-year-one-dollar lease was obtained and the $50,000 conversion job begun last August.

The opening display will feature exhibits dealing with the careers of Commodores Truxtun and Decatur, said Lieut. Comdr. Edward M. Davis, III, museum director.

Another display will feature a collection of 1500 prints of naval and merchant shipping of the fifteenth and eighteenth centuries given to the foundation by the Ferdinand Eberstadt's of New York. This collection alone is valued at between a quarter and half million dollars, said Davis.

Still a third display will portray the history of naval aviation.

Since its incorporation in 1926 the foundation has also acquired 50,000 letters, log books and journals written by officers who pioneered in the development of American sea power—records, says the foundation, which are "not duplicated in the official files of the Navy Department."

Only other naval museum here, said Commander Davis, is that at the Naval Gun Factory.

Sen. Benton Names L. G. Henderson Capitol Aide

Senator William Benton (D., Conn.) yesterday announced the appointment of Laurance G. Henderson as administrative assistant in his Washington office.

Henderson

The new appointee has worked at the Capitol since 1947. A former staff member of the Senate Banking Committee, he helped write the 1949 low-cost housing act, and last year made an investigation of cooperative housing in Europe for the banking committee.

The past three years, Henderson has been legislative assistant to Senator Ralph E. Flanders (R., Vt.), during which time he has taken an active interest in breaking the logjam in Washington's slum-clearance program.

He is a veteran of World War II, serving in four overseas campaigns with the Twenty-sixth (Yankee) Division.

Democrats Tune Up For Harmony Night

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Determined that harmony should prevail at least for the night, Democrats prepared yesterday for their annual Jefferson-Jackson $100-a-plate dinner here Thursday.

The more than 5000 party members who are expected to lay $100 on the line for the privilege of eating broiled filet mignon and hearing President Truman speak will go to the National Guard Armory with smouldering animosities banked for the night.

There will be no empty tables such as those reserved and then abandoned by Southern Democrats in 1948, but the issues which caused them are no nearer solution.

Pull No Punches

As for the President's speech, which has highlighted these affairs for years, Mr. Truman is expected to pull no punches. The President is expected to review his record in international affairs and call again for enactment of his Fair Deal program in toto.

The dinner itself will be something to remember. It will be prepared, on a 50-50 basis, by the Mayflower and Statler hotels, and whatever is left above its cost will go into already-plump Democratic coffers.

Catering Rehearsal

In anticipation of the problems involved in preparing and serving 5200 dinners simultaneously within the space of one hour, members of the hotel staffs held a dress rehearsal last week. Afterward they producing the food delicious, the service superb and the time 10 minutes within the 60-minute deadline.

Their dress rehearsal, held at the Mayflower, was attended by managers, maitres d'hotel, chefs, stewards, assistant chefs, assistant stewards of both establishments and a representative of the Democratic National Committee.

Their dinner started with Texas pink grapefruit au kirsch as the appetizer, with celery, queen olives and French rolls on the table. From that start it progressed to the broiled filet mignon Bordelaise with chateau pommes rissoles and new string beans provencale. The salad was hearts of lettuce with Rocquefort dressing.

For dessert those at the dress ehearsal had ice cream moulded as a carnation. Next week, explained Mayflower Executive Chef Nicholas Marchitelli, the ice cream will appear in donkey moulds but, e hastened to add, will be no less tasty than the carnations.

About 550 waiter will be detailed to serve the guests, approximately one waiter to each 10 guests. Food will be kept hot in charcoal-heated containers and "what is supposed to be cold will be cold."

Everything seemed to be in order except, perhaps, the tempers of sadly divided Democrats. But it was a safe bet that hot tempers would be served cold, at least for Thursday night.

Sparkman Rebuts

Bricker Hits Favoritism in Housing Plan

By The Associated Press

Senator Bricker (R., Ohio) yesterday contended that the possibility of political favoritism is "rampant" in President Tuman's middle-income cooperative housing program. Senator Sparkman (D., Ala.) denied it.

Bricker expressed his views in a letter to certain members of the Senate Banking Committee in a bid for votes to knock the cooperative program out of a pending general housing bill.

That program, the heart of the Administration bill, calls for two billion dollars in Government-backed loans to cooperatives made up of families earning from $2400 to $4700 a year.

Two days ago the banking committee voted, 7 to 6, to defer any action on the bill until February 23, pending a study of what its impact would be on the national economy. The committee is scheduled to get the Federal Reserve Board's opinion at a public hearing Thursday.

Bricker's letter went to Senators Frear (D., Del.), Fulbright (D., Ark.), Capehart (R., Ind.), Robertson (D., Va.), Flanders (R., Vt.), Ives (R., N. Y.), and Tobey (R., N. H.).

"In this bill," Bricker wrote, "all the possibilities for political favoritism . . . are rampant."

The Ohio lawmaker told a reporter he meant the program "would open the way to tie up the housing cooperatives with the Fair Deal program."

"It would mean special treatment for a special group and the opportunity for favoritism in deciding which groups would get loans," Bricker added.

Sparkman that isn't so.

"We've got to trust somebody to administer these programs," he said. "And I think that our experience with other housing programs—where there has been equal chance for political favoritism—disproves Senator Bricker's statement."

N.Y. Museum Purchases Chalice of Antioch

New York, Feb. 11 (AP). — The Chalice of Antioch, one of the great treasures of early Christian art, has been purchased by the Metropolitan Museum of Art. It has been variously dated from the first to the sixth century.

Found in 1910 by Arabs digging a well, it has been for many years in the possession of the New York and Paris art collector, Fahim Kouchakji.

Purchase of the chalice at an undisclosed price was made with funds provided by John D. Rockefeller, jr.

VA School Program Declared Exploited for Huge Sums

By the United Press

Veterans Administrator Carl R. Gray, jr., says get-rich-quick operators are exploiting the veterans education program for "huge sums" of money without giving "honest value" in return.

In many cases, the Veterans Administration is powerless to do anything about it, Gray said in a report to the Senate Labor and the House Veterans Affairs committees.

"There is no doubt," Gray said, "that veterans' education has been an extremely lucrative and profitable enterprise for certain types of businessmen.

" . . . The Government is spending huge sums of money for the education and training of veterans for which honest value is not being received."

The Government already has spent nine billion dollars for veterans' education—an amount only a little less than Congress has appropriated for Marshall Plan aid. Before the program ends in 1956, the cost is likely to rise to 25 or 30 billion dollars.

Gray's criticism was aimed primarily at persons, many without previous educational training, who have opened vocational or trade schools since the war to capture the veterans' business.

"The value of and need for such schools is questionable," Gray said. "Most . . . will disappear as soon as this program is finished."

More than 5600 of the 8800 approved schools below college level sprang up after the GI bill was passed, the report said.

The Veterans Administration, in many cases, has cracked down on schools which have been caught collecting excessive profits by phony devices, such as inflated figures on their cost of operation.

Gray told about a school which offered a 51-week course to 129 students and billed VA for $306,000. After investigation, VA decided the cost of supplies, claimed at $210,528, actually was $17,715.

Cost of instruction, the agency decided, should have been 46 cents an hour instead of the $2.06 demanded. The school was a converted factory that had gone bankrupt. If VA had paid the claimed amount the business would have collected a 951 percent return on its investment.

Republicans Attack 'Socialism' of Democrats

and local communities and the daily lives of our citizens."

He repeated the Republican charge that there are Communists on the Federal payroll and described President Truman's "Fair Deal" program as a "marked cards deal with every card in the deck marked so that it can be dealt off the bottom, the middle, or anywhere in the pack."

"The Socialist-Democrats in Government are now riding high," he said, "promoting a 'poor-house state' which, through hypocrisy and lies, is leading the Nation to ruin."

Senator Bricker (R., Ohio) turned his fire on the Supreme Court, which he accused of usurping the powers of Congress.

He declared that Justices Black and Douglas, and the late Justices Murphy and Rutledge, were guilty of "resorting to some illegitimate statutory interpretation to reach a result coinciding with their own left-wing attitudes and opinions."

In a speech prepared for the Illinois Bar Association at Peoria, Bricker said the political philosophy underlying "judicial lawmaking is strikingly similar to that involved in state socialism."

Although most GOP weekend attacks on the Administration were based on the campaign platform written last week by the National Committee and Republican members of Congress, there were some dissenters.

Charges Reds Are Pampered

Senator Hendrickson (R., N. J.), who voted against approving the policy statement, said in a New York address that the Republican Party should "turn its back on its past sins and return to the sort of liberalism" which characterized Lincoln.

He, too, accused the Administration of "soft or kid-glove treatment of communism and disloyalty" in the Government, adding that Alger Hiss was convicted of perjury only after "hiding behind his benefactors' official skirts" for 10 or 11 years.

Another dissenter was Senator Ives (R., N. Y.), who said in Schenectady it is "unfortunate" that Republicans have not adjusted to changing domestic and international conditions. He mentioned civil rights as one field in which the party has "failed miserably."

Like other Republicans, however, Ives lashed out at what he called the "socialized medicine" and "socialized agriculture" proposals backed by the Administration.

Apology Asked Of Legion in Hoover Attack

By the United Press

The Citizens Committee for the Hoover Report last night demanded that the American Legion apologize for publication of a "savage caricature" and "scurrilous" cartoon of former President Herbert Hoover.

The cartoon was published in the Legion's news service bulletin board circular as a part of the organization's fight against the Hoover Commission's recommendations dealing with veterans' affairs. The Legion said adoption of those portions of the commission's report "would bring about the dismemberment of the Veterans' Administration and, eventually, of the veterans' program.

Dr. Robert L. Johnson, president of Temple University and chairman of the citizens' committee, demanded the apology of National Commander George N. Craig.

"This cartoon is a savage caricature of Mr. Hoover," Johnson wrote to Craig. "It shows him in a room in which hospital beds are filled by merchant marines, Army wives, members of the armed forces, and other Federal employes while a veteran on crutches is saying: 'Wonder where I can find a bed?'

"Mr. Hoover is depicted as saying: 'They all look alike in pajamas.'

"I consider this cartoon scurrilous. Its implications are entirely incorrect. The Hoover Commission never, for one moment, made a single recommendation to deprive the veteran of medical care . . ."

More Food at Less Cost Predicted This Year

By The Associated Press

You may get more food at less cost this year.

The United States Department of Agriculture said so yesterday in a report that predicted there will be more turkey but less chicken and dumplings; more spinach and more candy, on your menu.

In a general way, the department report on the national food situation says everybody may eat just a little bit better than in 1949, when they ate about 11 percent better than they did before the war.

The reasons are:

If weather conditions are about normal, food supplies will be a little larger than last year.

Employment and income aren't expected to decline more than moderately, if at all, so people will have about the same amount of money to spend for food as they did in 1949.

Exports may fall off a bit and this would make more food available at home.

Food prices in 1950 are expected to go down a bit, not up.

Getting down to details, the report says there will be an increase in meat supplies, especially pork.

More fresh vegetables are expected to be available, although fewer onions and less cabbage. Generally speaking there will be about 14 percent more fresh vegetables than in 1949.

There will be fewer chickens and possibly a reduction in milk, ice cream and butter. But there will be more turkeys, and more eggs.

N. Y. Arrests Ten Pickets Protesting National Closing

New York, Feb. 11 (U.P.). — Ten pickets protesting alleged race discrimination policies at theaters in Washington and Baltimore were arrested today in the theatrical district.

The pickets were part of a large group of demonstrators parading in front of the office of Marcus Heiman, owner of the National Theater in Washington and Ford's Theater in Baltimore.

Welfare Revision Bill Due to Be Fought

For Governor

Montgomery GOP Pushing Roy Davis

By Dorothea Andrews
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Feb. 11.—A bill to put Maryland County welfare departments under State authority is scheduled for a sharp fight on the House of Delegates floor next week.

The bill, H. B. 11, is scheduled for third reading either in the Monday or Tuesday session. Perry O. Wilkinson, Prince Georges County delegation leader, said that he is "just about sure" the bill can be voted down.

He said he believes the bill was introduced because of the unsuccessful fight to remove Prince Georges County welfare head, Miss Susan Hendricks, from office.

Review Right Sought

The proposal, which was drafted by the Legislative Council, would give the State Department of Welfare the right to review "any decision of a local welfare department," make additional investigations if it wishes, decide how much assistance the applicant shall receive.

The bill states that "all decisions of the State Department shall be final and shall be binding upon the local welfare department involved and shall be complied with by the local department."

Another provision of the bill would give relief applicants the right of appeal to the State Department "if an application for general purpose assistance is not acted upon by a local welfare department within a reasonable time after the filing of the application, or is denied in whole or in part, or if any award of assistance is modified or canceled under the rules and regulations of the State Department."

Aim Is Uniformity

A third provision calls for county commissioners and the Baltimore City Council to provide matching funds for assistance money paid within their jurisdictions.

In submitting the bill for action by the General Assembly, the Legislative Council stated its purpose was to make the welfare laws of the State uniform.

Wilkinson said opposition to the bill among county delegations is based upon the degree to which it permits State intervention in county-administered relief programs.

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 11.—A man who was "indoctrinated in Republicanism at the knee of Uncle Joe Cannon" is being mentioned here for the Republican gubernatorial nomination in Maryland.

He is Montgomery County Senator Roy Tasco Davis, believed to be one of three leading candidates for the job of trying to get W. Preston Lane, jr., out of the State House here.

Others being boosted for the party nomination include Royden Blount, a manufacturer, of Baltimore and Howard County, and Brig. Gen. D. John Markey of Frederick County, who ran against Herbert R. O'Conor for a Senate seat in 1946 and lost by 1600 votes after a recount.

Senator Davis' name was put into the GOP hat by the Montgomery County delegation of the Assembly at a party meeting in Baltimore last month.

They contend the Senator makes friends easily "and he keeps them"; that as a member of the diplomatic service he "has promoted harmony among nations and he will bring about cooperation in carrying on the affairs of the State."

The man on whom this praise is being lavished is a 59-year-old mild-mannered, soft-spoken, cigar-smoking gentleman with an alarm clock political theory.

Says Davis: "I've seen more votes lost by long-winded speeches than ever gained." So whenever he makes a speech, he takes an alarm clock with him, sets it up to go off at a designated time.

Davis met up with "Uncle Joe" Cannon when he served as his page in the House of Representatives. By the time he was 21, he was head of the Missouri Young Republicans.

Now, 38 years later, he has held these jobs: college president, diplomat, director of the inter-American schools service of the American Council on Education, and now State senator.

Davis' interest in education led him to found Stephens College in Missouri, a school for girls, and after he settled in Montgomery County he was president of the National Park College in Silver Spring until it was "drafted" by the Government for hospital purposes during the war.

Prince Georges Women Blast Home Rule Bill

or county constitution through a democratic process."

But the Sothoron bill, delared the league, "would give to the people of this county, as sort of a paternalistic gesture from the county's rulers, a form of government which Mr. Sothoron judges to be good for the county."

"It is obviously true," stated the league's resolution, "that Mr. Sothoron and his fellow politicians are . . . seeking to stifle possible participation in the reorganization of the county's political machinery.

"It is characteristic of Prince Georges politics that the lid be held on and that only those in the inner circle may participate in fundamental decisions."

The league conceded that in the passage of the Sothoron bill and the establishment of the changes it seeks to effect, good work will be done, but added:

"It is grievously false and misleading, however, to permit this change to be put into operation under the name of home rule. It was decreed by the tightly-knit county political organization, it is being put through the General Assembly by that organization, and with the principal purpose in view that the control exercised now in the county be preserved.

"The bill is obviously designed to forestall what many people think must come, a complete reassessment of the problem of government in the county."

The Sothoron bill, said the league, is a gift of power by the county's rulers to the county's sub-rulers" and indicates "the Democratic organization of the county is on the run and its passage will now slow their pace."

The resolution said that the county's legislative delegation is a part of the county political machine and that the Sothoron bill "presents no more powers than the commissioners could have had for the asking at any session of the General Assembly."

The bill is truly, stated the league, "a shrewd political stroke designed to prevent the people of the county from participating in the establishment of a truly democratic government in the county."

Commenting on the provision of the bill which would place the chairman of the board of commissioners on a full-time job and make him the county's No. 1 administrator, the league protested:

"That man will certainly become a dominant political factor in the county. His time will be taken up more with politics than with management of the county's executive branch."

He would be "a political boss in every sense of the word," declared the league.

"If," said the resolution, "the county had two political parties with a chance to exchange the group out of power for the group in power, then government by a political organization headed by such an official as proposed by the Sothoron bill would not be so objectionable."

But this not being the case, said the league, the only hope for the county is full-time professional management, connected only in terms of broad control with the county commissioners.

"The commissioners," the league pointed out, "could then be political, as indeed they must, and the manager could get the county's work done."

Symphonic Drama Planned for Sesqui

Paul Green's "Washington Symphonic Drama," feature attracton of the 1950 Sesquicentennial celebration, will tell the story of the first President's "contribution to the fiber and strength of the democratic way of life"—and tell it in 15 scenes plus a couple of dream sequences.

With emphasis on the latter part of Washington's life, chiefly "the dark and bitter days of his second administration as President," the open-air drama will make use of pantomine, American and English folksongs, dances, speech, flashbacks, music and "vivid" choreography."

It will end in "a finale with the organ thundering" and the chorus "singing the creed of freedom's faith." There will be no orchestra in the show.

'A Complete Man'

When it is all over, the Pulitzer prize-winning playwright hopes the public "will have got pretty much the full impact of the lusty, complete man, from your to age."

These first details of the show, due to open June 15 in the Rock Creek Park amphitheater, now building, were revealed last night in a booklet about the project.

The Washington drama will be part of a trilogy by Green, following his "The Lost Colony" at Manteo, N. C., and "The Common Glory" at Williamsburg, Va. The first show dealt with Raleigh's tragic attempt to found the first permanent English colony in the New World; the second with the struggle of the colonies for independence.

The Washington show will cover the period of approximately 1785 to 1799, centering on "the dynamic and unrelenting struggle which Washington put forth in welding 13 recalcitrant and divergent colonies into one nation and then launching that young nation on its career."

The outline of the play does not indicate, however, just what it will have to say about the first President's major part in establishing the permanent capital of that young nation, the present city of Washington whose 150 years as the national capital is the reason for the Sesqui celebration.

At Mt. Vernon

The show will begin with a scene at Mt. Vernon after independence. There will be scenes to show him summoned to help prepare the Constitution, at the Constitutional Convention, at the Virginia Convention on ratification and the summons to be the first President.

In a religious scene at the family tomb at Mt. Vernon, Washington will be seen "communing with the spirits of the past, especially his dead half-brother Lawrence." Here he prays for God's help in the job ahead.

Another scene will depict Washington's last meeting with his dying mother who says:

"Build the Republic, George. You'll build it. Do it, son."

Funeral Finale

The play will take him through his first inauguration in New York and the second in Philadelphia. It was during the second term that he laid out the new capital.

The final scene will be Washington's funeral at Mount Vernon, here his coffin will be borne down the hill to the tomb "with the mourners chanting his favorite hymn and the tears of the people falling . . ."

The drama will show a Washington past 50 when its story begins. Then, says Green, his hair was "gray, and grizzled," his lips "slightly heavy, not beautiful, not ugly," his mouth "not too attractive—he has suffered much from unhappy teeth."

Order Awaited

District Due To Appeal Loan Ruling

By Richard L. Lyons
Post Reporter

District Court Judge Henry W. Schweinhaut's ruling of last Wednesday which put a big dent in the District's attempt to regulate loan companies will be appealed, it was indicated yesterday.

But Chester H. Gray, principal assistant corporation counsel, said action on an appeal must wait until Schweinhaut has signed a final order putting his memorandum opinion in official language.

Schweinhaut ruled that the District Commissioners' attempt to regulate companies charging interest rates of 6 percent or less is "unauthorized legislation." Congress did not give the Commissioners such specific authority, he ruled, and apparently meant they should not have it.

Does Not Apply to All

The ruling does not apply to companies charging from 6 percent up to the legal limit of 12 percent. They will be governed by the regulations which were adopted last September after three years' work.

Chief purpose of the regulations, said Gray, is to prevent loan companies from saddling borrowers with unnecessary charges and to force them to give borrowers complete and detailed statements of the loan conditions.

The regulations limit the amount of insurance a person can be required to take out on the article, usually a car, that the company is financing or accepting as security.

Life Insurance Out

Collision, fire and theft insurance may be legitimate requirements to protect a company financing a car, said Gray. But not life or accident insurance.

If Schweinhaut's ruling stands, could loan companies lower interest rates to 6 percent to escape regulation, and make up the difference by selling blacklisted insurance?

If they did, Gray thinks they could be taken to court and forced back into the regulated category.

William R. Lichtenberg, attorney for the loan companies, thinks it will be a fairly even division. Companies doing large volumes of business can make more profit from the higher rates, he said.

District Asks 'Care' Release

budget which is now before Congress.

The Commissioners' recommendation is a reply, though apparently not a full answer, to a committee request of last May for specific recommendations other than the District be relieved of it.

Some of the factors leading to the Commissioners' stand were these:

1. The Welfare Department argued child day care is not welfare work. And the cost puts an added strain on the department's already inadequate public assistance program.

2. A committee of District officials assigned to study the matter pointed out all the objections to District operation of the program, but recommended it be continued—somehow. Some of the objections listed were that it was originally an emergency war measure, it served only a few persons and it invades the field of private enterprise and charity.

3. Church groups recently turned down a suggestion that they take over the program.

Jessup to Visit Afghanistan After Far East Parley

Bangkok, Thailand, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Philip C. Jessup, U. S. roving ambassador, today said he would visit Afghanistan after the four-day conference here of American Far Eastern diplomats.

Afghanistan was not on the original itinerary of Jessup, who has visited 10 Far Eastern countries in preparation for the conference that begins Monday.

Recent reports have indicated Russia has been paying more than more attention to Afghanistan, and have pointed out that Afghanistan is situated ideally should the Russians ever wish to use it as a stepping stone in any drive on the Arabian oil countries.

Jessup, speaking at a press conference, carefully avoided mentioning Russia as the main target of the American talks.

He said the conference had no intention of attempting to form a western bloc of military alliances, but said the United States would receive such a move "sympathetically if the Far Eastern countries formed such a bloc themselves.

Greenbelt Rejects Tax Plan, Warns of Service Shutdown

The Greenbelt City Council yesterday rejected a Public Housing Administration proposal for a 1950 tax payment and repeated a warning that unless funds are immediately forthcoming city services will be halted Wednesday.

The council held a special session yesterday to consider a PHA offer of $154,248 as payment to the city for services rendered this year to 1875 tenants of the agency. PHA is the landlord of the Federally owned community.

The city council has previously asked for $182,634 from PHA—an increase of $7000 over the past year's payment. The negotiations last year between the council and PHA resulted in a cut of $8000 from the amount asked by the council.

The council yesterday repeated that it has only enough cash on hand to pay city employes on Wednesday, and this is the remainder of emergency loans from county banks totaling $15,000.

The council, accompanied by City Manager Charles T. McDonald and City Attorney Ralph W. Powers, will meet with John Dobbs, assistant commissioner of war emergency housing, PHA, at his office in Washington Monday at 10 a. m.

The only reasons given by PHA for reducing the amount asked for by the council, according to council members, were:

1. A cut of $29,000 earmarked for a depreciation fund for replacement and repair of equipment. This includes $15,000 paid in by PHA last year and $4000 proposed this year. PHA said it could not legally contribute to this fund under existing legislation. The council held, however, that the State charter establishing the city requires maintenance of such a fund.

2. A cut of $864 on the grounds that taxation should be collected from owners of the detached Parkbelt homes, built in recent years in the city on land leased from the Federal Government.

Child Care Authority To Lecture

Dr. Benjamin Spock, international authority on child care, will discuss "The Needs of Children at Different Ages" at 8 p. m. next Sunday at the University of Maryland Coliseum.

The director of the Rochester (Minn.) Child Health Project, Dr. Spock is the author of the book, "Baby and Child," a manual for parents which has sold more than a million copies.

Dr. Spock, who has combined the fields of pediatrics and psychiatry, also is a member of the planning committee for the 1950 White House Conference on Children and Youth.

His lecture will cover the needs of children from preschool age through adolescence. A question period will follow the talk, and questions should be written out in advance.

There will be no admission charge, but tickets must be secured in advance by sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Nursery School-Kindergarten Education Department, University of Maryland, College Park, Md.

The lecture is sponsored by the college of education, the department of nursery school-kindergarten education, the University of Maryland Parent-Teacher Association and the Childhood Education Club.

Diploma Change Gives Students 8 Elective Subjects

A change in Arlington's high school diploma requirements will enable all students to take eight elective subjects during their four years in high school, according to an announcement by Washington-Lee superintendent Claude Richmond.

Formerly candidates for college entrance were restricted to three electives.

At the same time, Richmond announced the following new courses are available to Washington-Lee's 2000 students this year: craftsmanship, vocational mathematics, creative writing, Bible study, elementary psychology, Greek and Roman culture.

Democrats to Dance

The Arlington County Democratic Club will hold a George Washington's Birthday Dance at the Cherrydale Firehouse, Lee hwy. near Quincy st. at 10 p. m. Friday. Admission will be $1 a person.

Army Medics Take Off for Jungle Duty

Four Washington medical officers are off to the Malayan jungles to study scrub typhus and special clothing to protect man against disease-bearing jungle mites.

All staff members of the Army Medical Department Research and Graduate School, Army Medical Center, they left Washington by air last Friday for Kuala Lumpur, Malaya.

Major Robert Traub, of 1207 N. Pitt st., Alexandria, chief of the school's departmen. of parasitology, heads the unit as field director for the scientific expedition.

Aides In Clothing Tests

Serving with him are Capt. Herbert L. Ley, of 2220 Washington ave., Silver Spring, Md., and Lieut. Fred H. Diercks, of 7029 Strathmore st., Chevy Chase, Md., both of the department of virus and rickettsial diseases, and Lieut. Vernon J. Tipton, parasitology department.

The scientists will test clothing impregnated with new repellents developed jointly by the Army and the Department of Agriculture. They will wear the clothing to personally test its repelling effectiveness against typhus-bearing jungle mites.

Major Traub and Captain Ley were with the initial Army team sent to Malaya two years ago to determine if scrub typus fever, a wartime military problem, could be effectively treated with the then new antibiotic, chloromycetin. The drug was proven effective not only against scrub typhus but also typhoid fever.

Reported Beneficial

Returning to Malaya with a second team in 1948, Major Traub participated in studies on the use of the drug as a preventive against scrub typhus infection. The drug's use in this respect was reported beneficial.

The present (third) research team, a spokesman said, is to concentrate similar studies on deep jungle species of the chigger-like insects which infest the scrublands; to test insecticides against them, and to conduct the clothing tests.

Dr. Joseph E. Smadel of 9711 Lawndale st., Silver Spring, who led the previous teams, is home director of the present project, and expects to join the team there within the next four months.

Northern Virginia P-TA Meets

Leesburg, Va., Feb. 11 (Spl.).—The Northern Virginia District, Virginia P-TA Congress, approved new by-laws and set up budget funds for the next three years at its spring meeting today in the Leesburg High School.

The new by-laws provided for changes needed to bring the organization "up to date," according to Mrs. Harry S. Sommers, district president, but did not materially alter the organization's administration. Budget funds included appropriations to send the district president to a national P-TA Congress convention in 1950, 1951 and 1952.

At the afternoon session, the group heard a talk by Fairfax County Delegate Edwin Lynch, who explained educational legislation pending before the General Assembly. About 120 delegates attended the session from Fauquier, Loudoun, Prince William, Arlington and Fairfax Counties and the cities of Alexandria and Falls Church.

Everybody's getting into the act in the planning of new Prince Georges County schools — but that's the way school officials want it.

In an ambitious 18-million-dollar construction program, the board of education has instituted a "democratic process" of school planning through which it hopes to supplement expert technical advice with the views of laymen. The board is seeking, particularly, the suggestions of those most directly affected by further school projects.

The wheels of democracy, 1950 version, began rolling this week when more than a dozen conferees met at the Surrattsville School to discuss plans for a new community school. The group included teachers, parents, interested residents of the community, students —and even the school's 80-year-old janitor.

From suggestions contributed at this and future meetings, school officials expect to decide how best to spend the $350,000 allocated for a new Surrattsville school.

"Uncle Jimmy" Hawkins, who has served as janitor at the school for 34 years, was called from the initial conference to respond to an emergency, and didn't get a chance to speak his piece. "But," said Principal John M. Pryde, "Uncle Jimmy has some definite ideas of his own and we want him to tell us about them."

Robert Richards, 18-year-old student council president, made it clear that students want a gymnasium in the new building, along with a modern shower room and adequate recreational facilities.

His request for a gymnasium was indorsed by the other conferees, who also reached agreement on these points:

(1) The new school should be an addition to the present building rather than a separate structure, so that it will not be necessary to expend part of the allocation for a new site; (2) the elementary and high schools in the new combined building should be separated, and (3) adequate cafeteria facilities for both schools are a "must."

These recommendations, and those developed at future conferences of the group will be studied by Paul S. Kea, school architect, according to Thomas S. Gwynn, jr., director of school planning for the county. Every effort will be made to incorporate their ideas in the final plans, Gwynn said, provided they all can be carried out with the funds allocated.

It is the board of education's intention to follow the same plan in the development of all future school projects, Gwynn added, "so that the taxpayers can be assured they're getting full value for every dollar spent."

Several Parent-Teacher Associations will celebrate Founders' Day this week with special programs, including children's plays, talks by school officials, teas and luncheons and open house invitations to parents and public.

College Park Journalism School Backed

Baltimore, Feb. 11 (AP).—Dr. H. C. Byrd, University of Maryland president, left it up to a subordinate today to make an appeal to the Maryland Press Association for support of a journalism school at the College Park campus.

Dr. Byrd made no mention of an association report expressing belief "the people of Maryland would get more for their tax dollar in the way of a school of journalism at Washington College than they can expect from the University of Maryland.

Eugene T. Gunning, editor of the Cumberland Times, in the report yesterday said "if Dr. Byrd operates in the future as he has in the past, College Park is no place for a school of journalism of the type I think this association has in mind."

Dr. Byrd was principal speaker today at the concluding luncheon of the association.

Earlier Alfred Crowell, new head of the university's department of journalism, commented on Gunning's report. He declared that the future of his department would depend entirely on the support of the Maryland Press Association. He urged its cooperation in developing a program of internship involving employment of journalism students as part-time workers on their papers.

Other speakers at the convention were Prof. Roscoe B. Ellard, head of the Columbia University journalism department, and Robert H. Estabrook of The Washington Post.

3500 Businessmen Warned on Licenses

The District yesterday warned 3500 businessmen who have not taken out licenses for this year to do so promptly or face police action.

The Income and Franchise Tax Division reminded them that all District corporations and unincorporated businesses having annual gross receipts of more than $5000 must obtain licenses. About 1500 corporations and 2000 unincorporated businesses have not done so, tax officials said.

LIVES TO TELL—EAL Steward Marc Fisher, who dangled by a leg 2000 feet over Tampa Bay when the plane door opened, goes back to work. He clung for 10 minutes to precarious perch in the doorway until the plane made an emergency landing purser on a Pan American World Airways transocean stratocruiser, didn't have Fisher's luck. He was sucked out into space through the open door of the plane, 8000 feet over Long Island, and plunged to his death door suddenly opened at 10,000 feet, Mrs. Winburg recovered quickly. She produced sedatives from a traveling kit she carries, to administer to a hysterical expectant mother. And she had ammonia to revive an aged woman who apparently had fainted and whose pulse she could not feel.

Tried to Arrange Blanket

The steward, John Harris, 28, went out the door of a Pan-American Airlines ship over Long Island when, Mrs. Winburg said, he tried to arrange a blanket over the cabin door, which had accidentlly opened.

"He was a very nice man," Mrs. Winburg said, "and had been very courteous and accommodating. He had brought me the blanket a few minutes before because I was cold, but he took it to put over the door. When it opened, there was a blast of wind and first I thought there had been an explosion in the kitchen.

"But the wind was coming in and it got pretty cold. I didn't see him go out. I don't think anyone did.

"The rest of the crew were wonderful. The stewardess was Lya Balus. Mr. Harris told me she was French. She took the things from my traveling kit and gave them to the girl that was expecting a baby and the elderly woman.

Closed to Eight Inches

"Then the crew went to work trying to shut the door. They couldn't do anything at first. But by some strange happening, it suddenly came partly closed, open only about eight inches. We landed that way."

Mrs. Winburg said that she trained as a nurse at Mount Sinai Hospital, Philadelphia. She was married to Dr. N. Norman Smiler, who died here in 1942, and managed his office, she said. She has subsequently remarried.

Oil Slick Stirs Hope for Plane

Corpus Christi, Tex., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Search planes and ships criss-crossed the Gulf of Mexico today, looking for a Navy flying boat that vanished yesterday with nine aboard.

The Navy said the plane "certainly" was down.

A search plane sighted an oil slick at midafternoon about 70 miles southeast of Galveston, on the presumed course of the missing plane at its final report. A Coast Guard vessel was sent to investigate.

Last word from the twin-engine Martin Mariner came at 3 p. m. Friday—a routine report by radio to its home base, the Corpus Christi Naval Air Station.

That was two hours after it took off for a routine training flight, carrying an instructor-pilot, four crewmen, and four midshipmen in training.

Weather conditions were slightly unsettled due to a minor cold front, but a Navy spokesman said there was no "great turbulence."

ginia Smith, 2nd Lt.," because it had been used by a sister-in-law who was a WAC in the war.]

5. Harrison, after his arrival from New York, said he doesn't know what his mother uses the vibrator for, but he is going to borrow it to encourage growth of his hair.

Harrison said he went to Los Angeles for the funeral of his father, Harold Roy Harison, 64, who died February 3. He said members of the family determined that his mother should come East for a visit, and that she is now with a daughter, Mrs. Charles L. Green of Jackson Heights, N. Y.

He said htree suitcases were checked and weighed at Los Angeles, and only two arrived at Newark. Press dispatches said an American Airlines attendant heard the buzing in the suitcase, and summoned police. They in turn summoned the Army ordnance experts and X-ray equipment.

"All I hope," Harrison said last night, "is that they didn't douse the suitcase in oil.'

They didn't. The Los Angeles police finally got up courage to open the suitcase. They found the still-buzzing vibrant.

FCC Offered 'Hams' Advice On Color Video

The Federal Communications Commission was offered the pooled technical skills and knowledge of 50,000 television "hams" yesterday to aid in deciding what system of color television is best.

Emmanuel M. Cohan, president of Transvision, Inc., producer of "knock-down" TV sets for amateur home set assemblers, recommended in a letter to FCC that the opinions of experienced experimenters be obtained before FCC adopts standards for commercialization of color TV.

Cohan offered the FCC its complete files of amateur TV experimenters numbering over 50,000 names.

Gamblers' Influence Seen in Md. Voting

Charges that "gamblers' money" flooded Prince Georges County in the 1946 election were voiced last night by Brig. Gen. John D. Markey.

He addressed a Lincoln Day dinner of 200 Republicans of the county at the Idle Club Elite, near Suitland. General Markey was an unsuccessful candidate for the Senate in 1946, and now is mentioned as a candidate for Governor of the State.

He called on Republicans of Prince Georges County to get together in "team work" to take advantage of a "great opportunity to win the county away from the Democratic machine."

General Markey said that in the last election there was such an "outpouring" of gamblers' money in the county that it "overran friendship and other things."

"Never in the history of the State," he said, "has one county had placed upon it in an election campaign the large amount of money that was poured in here by disreputable citizens—the gamblers."

He charged that the "Democratic machine has disgraced the high moral values of Prince Georges County citizens.'

After the meeting, General Markey said there were reports in the 1946 campaign of expenditures by gamblers in Prince Georges County of $100,000.

He said that gamblers "overflowing from the District" have "corrupted the law enforcement forces of the county." He also said these gamblers were interested in horse-racing bets, numbers, slot machines and controlled gambling in clubs.

J. Raymond Fletcher, chairman of the Prince Georges Republican State Central Committee, told the audience of 200 that a county home-rule bill has been introduced in the State Legislature by the county delegation.

He urged Republicans to analyze the legislation and give the committee their opinion.

Fletcher, who was toastmaster of the affair, said, "Undersirable publicity has been given to our county by the press—and it is fully justified. It should act as an impetus to goad us on to a battle this fall at the polls."

Medical Photos

D. C. Lensman Specializes In Operations

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Speaking of operations—

Seymour Kaplan of this city has probably seen more incisions than the average doctor sees in a lifetime. And even more excisions.

He's a medical and scientific photographer. That is, he makes his living out of taking pictures for the doctors and for medical and scientific publications.

Kaplan has his studio—that is, shop—in the X-ray and Cancer Treatment building of Garfield Memorial Hospital, which is a satisfactory arrangement for him, the hospital, and its doctors.

Medical pictures are his specialty, but he also tackles such orders as macrophotographing corrosive effects in automobile radiators, or preparing lantern slides on fertility of the common earthworm. A macrophotograph is "a photograph taken under low-range magnification.

"Before" and "After" Shots

About 98 percent of his work, Kaplan said, is in making color lantern slides and motion pictures for doctors' use in classroom lectures and medical exhibits. The pictures for the most part are "Before" and "After" shots, that is, preoperative and postoperative photos.

For more than esthetic reasons, Kaplan says the assignments which give him the greatest pleasure are taking pictures of babies born with hare lips and cleft palates, and the after-surgery photos which show the birth disfiguration only as a fine, thin scar.

Esthetically, he confesses, an encapsulated tumor, the nonmalignant type contained within its own membranous sac is a thing of beauty and a medical photographer's joy forever, with its fine, vari-colored network of blood supply. It's a challenge to color photography, and to the photographer.

Cancer Cured by X-Ray

Kaplan also found pleasure in a series of cancer tumor cases he did for Dr. Ralph Caulk, attending radiologist at Garfield Memorial Hospital and director of its Tumor Clinic. The tumors photographed were treated with X-rays.

One, explained the photographer, was of a man who had a cheek tumor, an ulcerated crater on the side of his face, "like the surface of a big, rough orange."

"Under X-ray treatment, the crater had completely filled with tissue, and the cheek was full, and pink, and smooth, like a newborn baby's skin."

Conversely, Kaplan confesses to "a sort of let-down feeling" after assignments to photograph malignant tumors before and after their excision from patients in terminal stages of incurable cancers.

Doctor's Orders

The photographer says he takes his medical pictures on doctor's orders only. And the few patients who do ask for "souvenir" pictures in appendectomies, kidney removals and the like are "firmly discouraged."

Kaplan got his start in the specialty through a WPA course in photography during "depression days." He then approached the New York Health Department and secured an 18-month position there photographing syphilitic lesions for use in postgraduate training of doctors in venereal disease case history studies.

Spillway Stops Threat of Flood At New Orleans

New Orleans, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—The spillway that cost taxpayers 13 million dollars paid off today.

Even the swirling, muddy Mississippi River was tamed by the 7700-foot concrete structure that serves as a giant regulator when the flood stage approaches. That point was reached yesterday when the river stood at 19.9 feet, one-tenth of a foot below the "danger point."

Nearly all of New Orleans is below sea level and the city is half surrounded by the Mississippi River. It was protected by a levee until 1927, when U. S. Army engineers blew up the dike to save the city. Then the Bonnett Carré spillway was constructed.

The engineers opened 72 20-foot bays in the spillway yesterday, last night and today. The river was down 2.4 inches to 19.7 feet today and still was falling.

Man General Shot In Home Says He Was 'Blind Drunk'

Van Nuys, Calif., Feb. 11 (U.P.).—Perry L. Davis, 35, tonight said he was "blind drunk" when Maj. Gen. Walter P. Story shot and critically wounded him as an "intruder" when he sought to use Story's telephone.

"I probably wanted to use the telephone because I think I ran out gas," Davis, a construction worker, told officers. Investigators found Davis' car a block from Story's house, with less than a quart of gasoline in it.

Story, former commandant of the Fortieth Division of the National Guard, told officers Davis came to the Story home and asked the maid to use the telephone.

She became suspicious and called Story, who came with a gun held behind his back. Story offered Davis use of a kitchen telephone, but Davis refused and started for a front room, Story said. Story drew his revolver and ordered Davis to stand still, but Davis said: "I could shoot you out of a tree with a .38."

When Davis whipped his hand toward his side, Story said he fired. Officers said Davis was unarmed.

tion of key individuals in one locality," Lapp said.

In a speech prepared for delivery to the Philosophical Society here last night and in a conversation with the United Press, Lapp said he considers the H-bomb a greater threat to this country than to Russia.

This threat could reach a climax in 5 or 10 years, Lapp said. He based this estimate, he said, on international political factors as well as on Soviet scientific and technical capabilities.

The only Russian target worth expenditure of an H-bomb—a weapon he said would be equivalent in explosive effect to one million pounds of TNT—"is Moscow." Improved United States uranium-plutonium A-bombs would do for other Soviet targets, he suggested.

But the United States, Lapp added, is full of potential superbomb targets. He cited cities like New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit and Los Angeles with a total population of nearly 20 million.

As long as the Federal Government remains centralized in Washington, he added, "no one will ever be able to convince industry that it should disperse or civilians that they should limit the size of their cities.'

He estimated the H-bomb will weigh about 25 tons, inflict blast damage on an area of 100 square miles, and sear with heat rays a region of 200 to 400 square miles. He said he believes the H-bomb, for maximum effect, will be exploded about 4 miles above the ground. The A-bomb used against Japan were detonated nearly 2000 feet in the air.

AEC Announces Scholarships for Advanced Studies

The Atomic Energy Commission yesterday announced a new program of advanced science scholarships intended to train students for eventual employment by the Nation's atomic project.

The agency said the new fellowships in biological and physical sciences are the first requiring research projects so closely related to atomic energy that graduates will be eligible for work with the AEC.

The announcement said the AEC does not guarantee such employment, however.

"Each fellow will be required to have either a full security clearance as provided by the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 or 'fellowship approval' as to loyalty as required by the Independent Offices Appropriations Act for fiscal year 1950," the agency said.

Applications for the new fellowships must be filed by next March 4.

Violin Assault Suit Settled After 2-Year Action

Salisbury, Md., Feb. 11 (AP).—A case that started almost two years ago with an argument over a violin bow was settled out of court yesterday.

Attorneys for the principals—Mrs. Mae Lynch of Frankford, Del., and Thomas R. Young, Salisbury music state owner—refused to disclose any details of the settlement.

It all started when Mrs. Lynch charged that she was assaulted by Young during an argument over the violin bow. The Wicomico County Circuit Court awarded her $3500 in damages on May 10, 1948.

Young lost his appeal. Then Mrs. Lynch charged that she hadn't been able to collect. She said Young had transferred his assets to Thomas R. Young, Inc., in an effort to avoid payment.

Port au Prince, Haiti, Feb. 11 (U.P.).—United States Assistant Secretary of State Edward G. Miller, jr., today said invasion or armed aggression against an American country would bring prompt United States action under the Inter-American Treaty of Reciprocal Assistance.

50th Birthday Of Carabaos Next Saturday

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

MOST of the top "brass" from the Pentagon—and Eastern States—will be on hand Saturday night when Four-Star General "Tooey" Spaatz lifts his goblet high and cries:

"Gentlemen, the Carabaos have but one toast—to the President of the United States."

With this click of glass and the stomp and resounding surge of an Army, Navy and Air Force color guard and drum and bugle corps across the Statler stage, the Military Order of the Carabao will celebrate its golden anniversary.

The annual "Wallow" of this most unique of war veteran societies is one of the high spots of the Washington winter season. Yearly, since the early days of the century, the ranking officers of the armed services have turned out for an evening of fun, drink and song, to commemorate the "Days of the Empire."

In a very real sense, America's armed forces first became "unified" within the Carabao brotherhood. Officer veterans of all services—veterans of the Spanish-American War and Philippine Insurrection—banded together in 1900 to form the order.

It was a drinking club, pure and simple, and though it has since grown into something more substantial, the highlight of the year always comes at the "Waliow" or dinner.

And it is truly unified. Gen. Clifton B. Cates, Commandant of the Marine Corps, will be installed this Saturday as "Grand Paramount Carabao," succeeding Gen. Carl Spaatz, United States Air Force, retired.

Head of the order before Spaatz was Gen. Jonathan M. (Skinny) Wainwright, and before him, Fleet Admiral William F. (Bull) Halsey.

Rossellini Says U. S. Version Of 'Stromboli' Won't Be His

Rome, Feb. 11 (AP).—Roberto Rossellini said tonight that his controversial film Stromboli, as it will be shown in the United States, "is not my picture."

Stromboli stars Ingrid Bergman, whom Rossellini plans to marry. The birth February 2 of her baby son, called Roberto, is to be registered in Rome's Bureau of Vital Statistics Sunday, Rossellini's attorney announced.

Rossellini told a news conference:

"I feel duty bound to inform the American public I now presume that, in the United States, RKO will release its own version of Stromboli, which differs substantially from my original picture as it will be shown in other countries of the world."

Rossellini reiterated he plans to marry Miss Bergman "as soon as possible" after her decree of divorce from Dr. Peter Lindstrom of Los Angeles arrives here by air mail from Juarez, Mexico.

RKO to Start Showing Picture Wednesday

Hollywood, Feb. 11 (AP).—Ingrid Bergman's controversial Stromboli film will start showing on screens throughout the Nation Wednesday in the face of objections that will ban it in some areas. (It will open Wednesday at RKO Keith's Theater in Washington.)

RKO Studio, undaunted by criticism swirling about the heads of actress Bergman and her Italian lover, Roberto Rossellini, has proceeded with plans to release the picture in more than 400 theaters.

Administration Shies From Federal Leave Issue as Attacks Grow

The Federal employe vacation system is undergoing heavy attacks. The attacks are piling up because no one in Government stepped forward to defend it.

Members of three different congressional committees are reported to have had informal discussions recently on the leave controversy.

Senators Douglas (D., Ill.) and Taft (R., Ohio) as well as half a dozen House members are among the public critics of the present annual leave system.

The Administration has adopted a "hands-off" attitude. An official is reported to have informed an interested member of Congress that any leave change would be up to Congress.

The controversy is merely brewing. It hasn't reached the showdown stage and it won't for some weeks. However, several members of Congress are said to have had bills drafted to cut back both the amount of annual leave classified and per diem employes can earn and accumulate.

If they're introduced, the measures will be referred to the Senate and Houst Post Office and Civil Service Committees. Observers agree that it's questionable whether either one, or both, of these committees would approve any plan to reduce leave.

On the other hand, the leave problem may get before Congress in an indirect way. Appropriations Committee members in both the Senate and the House are looking into the leave policies. It's possible that they could get the issue before Congress by nailing a rider onto an appropriation bill.

Also, there are half a dozen bills in the Post Office and Civil Service Committees to increase the annual leave of postal employes from the present 15-day limit. Any such bill could be used to cut back classified and per diem employe leave as well as to boost postal employe vacations.

All of which brings up two timely questions: (1) what is the history of employe leave? and (2) what was the thinking in enacting the present system?

It may surprise some people to know that the classified and per diem leave system today isn't as liberal as it once was. These employes were given 30 days vacation annually before the Economy Act days of the early 1930's when time off was reduced to 26 days.

In addition, the standard work week for years was 5½ days of 39 hours. It has been 5 days of 40 hours since the war.

Generally speaking, the average Federal employe today works a little longer than he was once required to. In contrast, the trend in private industry over the past 25 years has been fewer working hours. And that applies, too, to State, county and city employes, many of whom are now on work weeks of less than 40 hours.

So, there can't be any complaint from the economy bloc on the 40-hour work week. That work week would be shortened if we could have peace in the world.

But the argument is made that the classified and per diem employe gets considerably more vacation than his colleagues in private industry, and that's true—on paper.

A dozen years ago the late President Roosevelt issued an order directing agencies to charge employes only with leave actually taken. Up to that time it had been possible to deduct weekends and holidays against leave under certain conditions. The Roosevelt order gave employes the privilege of taking 26 workdays, or full five weeks and one day.

The thinking behind the 26-day vacation is simply this—that Government is far stricter in administering its leave laws than private industry. Therefore, its leave policy should be more generous. For example:

The Federal workers whose bus or streetcar is delayed by a traffic tie-up and he reports to work 15 or 20 minutes late is required, in most instances, to take an hour's leave, the smallest amount allowed.

If he has to get off half an hour earlier to meet his Aunt Susie or buy the groceries for his dinner he's charged an hour's leave.

In other words, all time away from work during official working hours is counted against a Federal employe's vacation. That's the theory behind the 26-day provision.

In private industry, on the other hand, such short absences aren't counted against an employe's annual vacation

Representative Albert Thomas (D., Tex.) is the chief critic of the accumulated leave system. This is the background on it:

Prior to the war, employes were permitted to carry over a maximum of 60 days of vacation from one year to another. When vacations were restricted during the war the limit was lifted to 90 and it was cut back to 60 after the war ended in 1946. But the people who built up more than 60 days were allowed to retain it but they couldn't add to it.

For one reason or another, many of these employes still have from 60 to 93 days accumulated. In addition, thousands have had to forfeit leave on yearends.

It wouldn't make anybody mad if Congress would wipe out all leave over 60 days by paying the employes for it. Under no conditions should employes be forced to give it up.

Billeci Free On $25,000 Surety Bond

Government to Call Additional Witnesses In Investigation of Gaming Trial 'Fix'

Frank Billeci, convicted numbers operator, was freed from custody shortly before noon yesterday after a corporate surety bond for $25,000 was posted at the United States Court of Appeals.

Billeci, convicted with William "Snags" Lewis, of complicity in a multi-million dollar numbers ring January 26, was brought from Lorton Reformatory earlier in the day and lodged in the cellblock at District Court.

At about 11:45 a. m., accompanied by Attorneys Myron G. Ehrlich, Bernard Margolius and Joseph Sitnick and manacled to Deputy Marshal Fred Houghton, Billeci was led from the cellblock and walked to the appellate court a short distance away.

There, in the presenc of A. J. Crouse, chief deputy clerk of the Appeals Court, Billeci signed the surety as did Joseph Robison acting for the Glen Falls (N. Y.) Indemnity Co. That firm had also posted surety for Lewis on Friday when he was released.

"I'm going home to my wife and children," Billeci smiled. Ehrlich said he would drive Billeci to his home at 509 Margaret dr., Silver Spring, Md.

Before leaving the cellblock, the short, dark-haired and smiling numbers man borrowed a gaily colored tie from a deputy marshal.

He explained he had given his necktie to a Lorton collector who had admired it.

Meanwhile, Government prosecutors were preparing to call additional witnesses Monday before the District grand jury investigating alleged jury tampering during the gambling trial.

The jury has already heard testimony from at least seven witnesses including three FBI agents.

Police Arrest 16 Men In Girard St. Raid

On a tip that horse race bets were being taken there, police yesterday raided an apartment at 1410 Girard st. nw. and arrested 16 men.

Two were charged with setting up a gaming table and released under $2000 bond for appearance in Municipal Court Monday. They are John Lanzalotta, 37, listed as a laborer, of 1751 Park rd. nw., and Samuel E. Briles, 42, a barber of 2809 15th st. nw.

The other 14 men were booked on disorderly conduct charges and elected to forfeit $10 bond each.

Lieut. Roy Blick, chief of the vice squad, led the raid. He gave this account of it:

He knocked on the door of the apartment, which had a peep-hole, and he and his men were admitted immediately, although they had no warrant.

Inside the six-room apartment they saw 16 men sitting around in the living room, which was equipped with a sofa, some chairs, a small table and a radio. The men were looking at scratch sheets and listening to race results on the radio.

On the table were several horse-race bets which had been written out.

The apartment contained no household wares of any kind, said Blick, and no clothing or personal effects. The three dressers were empty. There was no icebox in the kitchen. The gas in the apartment was not turned on, he said.

None of the 16 men had keys to the apartment, Blick said. None admitted knowing who rented the apartment or lived there.

The raid was highly reminiscent of another last August on what Blick described as a "gambling headquarters for upper 14th st." That was at 1436 Park rd. nw.

Blick led that raid, the door was opened for the police raiders, police found a sparsely furnished apartment—and one of the men arrested was Briles.

At that time Briles was charged with operating a lottery, possessing numbers slips and setting up a gaming table.

The cases against him and another man were nolle prossed, however, byt the United States attorney, who said that in entering the men's apartment without a warrant police "invaded their privacy."

New Delay Indicated for FEPC Bill in House Unit

District Committee Chairman McMillan Seen Getting Aid In 'No Quorum' Calls

The House District Committee, headed by a South Carolina Democrat, will take its turn this week in delaying action on the proposed FEPC bill.

Normally, Monday would be District Day on the House calendar but it has been called off because the day also is being observed as the legal holiday for Lincoln's birthday.

Wednesday, however, will be call-of-the-committees day with the District Committee next in line. Since only two bills now are ready for floor action, the full committee has been called to meet at 10 a. m. Monday in executive session, presumably to report out some other measures.

Now ready for consideration are bills to incorporate the Girl Scouts and to prevent any doctor, not a citizen, from practicing in the District. This second measure is aimed at DP doctors now coming to this country under the Displaced Persons Act. It is similar to restrictive legislation in other States.

The full committee is expected to pick and choose Monday from such measures as these: Daylight savings, expansion of the Park and Planning Commission and extension of rent control. The first two bills are candidates for full committee approval.

Taken together with the two minor bills now ready, Chairman McMillan will be able to hold the floor Wednesday. Presumably he will be aided by repeated calls of no quorum as on past calendar Wednesdays when other committees were called. Next after the District Committee, however, is the Education and Labor Committee, whose chairman is waiting his turn to call up the controversial Fair Employment Practices Committee bill.

The District Committee's Judiciary Subcommittee has scheduled a hearing for 10 a. m. Wednesday on two licensing bills affecting local engineers and architects. It is expected that each of these bills will exempt from examination requirements all those who have been practicing here the past five years.

Crime Probe Spotlight Seen on Fay Office

The House District Crime Investigating Committee's spotlight this week is expected to be aimed at the District Attorney's office.

This was indicated at the close of last week's hearings when two assistants to District Attorney George Morris Fay were hurriedly called to the stand.

In each case the assistant was questioned as to why charges against arrested persons were reduced or dropped. Committee Counsel Hyman I. Fischbach indicated he has a lot of similar cases which will be brought out publicly when hearings are resumed.

Thus the crime probe, which beban as a check into the activities of the Police Department, now is pointing up the long-time disputes between Superintendent of Police Robert J. Barrett and Fay. The two have been in conflict on numerous occasions over local gambling activities and other aspects of law enforcement.

Home Rule Fight Pushed By Federation

Citizens Group Urges Congressmen to Get Bill Out of Committee

By Sy Fishbein

Post Reporter

In a letter dispatched yesterday to every member of the House of Representatives, the Federation of Citizens Associations made known its position on home rule and urged Congressmen to sign the petition to get the Kefauver bill out of the House District Committee.

Written over the signature of Federation president Herbert P. Leeman, the letter was authorized at a January 21 meeting as a means of implementing the Federation's drive for local suffrage.

It states the Federation's indorsement of the Kefauver bill as "the best hope of restoring to citizens of the District of Columbia, to the extent possible, the American right to local self-government.

"In evaluating the Federation's position," the letter continues, "you will wish to know about this organization.

71 Civic Groups

"It is composed of 71 white civic associations. The members of the association make their homes in the District, pay taxes as District residents, send their children to District schools, and actively interest themselves in problems of the District. . . .

"They are the group which, if home rule were granted, would be active in seeing that the local government was responsible, efficient, economical and devoted to the best interests of the District.

"It is the judgment of a clear majority of their delegates to the Federation that home rule, along the lines provided by the Kefauver bill, is desirable. . .

"We urge you to sign discharge petition No. 19 if you have not already done so, in order that the matter may be considered by the entire House of Representatives."

Support Reviewed

The letter also reviewed the wide bipartisan support which the bill has received. The petition, which currently has a reported 134 signatures, needs 218 to discharge the bill from committee.

Leeman told reporters yesterday that the progress of the petition so far had "surpassed my expectations." He expressed optimism about the possibility of House action on the Kefauver bill at this session. The Senate has already passed the measure.

"I was very gratified to read that Representative Herter had signed the petition," Leeman said. "I thought his reasons for signing were sound and in the public interest.'

On Friday, Representative Christian A. Herter (R., Mass.), a member of the House Rules Commitee and generally known to be against discharge petition procedure, announced that he had signed the home-rule bill petition because he thought there was "sufficient interest to warrant bringing the measure to a vote."

Understanding Lacking

Although Leeman admitted that the Federation was not unanimously in favor of the Kefauver bill, he said "a great deal of the opposition to it stems from the fact that members don't understand its provisions."

He had found this to be the case, Leeman said, in discussions with "hundreds" of citizens' association members.

"A lot of them turned in favor of the bill after I explained it to them," he said.

"Some people think it will interfere with national representation." Leeman added, "but national representation usually follows home rule and actually we'll be in a better position to obtain national representation if we get home rule."

Carey Girl Continues To Show Improvement

Patricia Anne Carey, 8, continued to show "slight improvement" yesterday at the Washington Sanitarium, and nurses said she was speaking a few words.

Patricia Anne is the daughter of James B. Carey, secretary-treasurer of the CIO. The Carey family lives at 8 Hilltop rd., Silver Spring, Md.

She was struck by an automobile while on her way to school and was unconscious for 32 days, until February 6.

Father Sees It

Auto Kills Boy Near La Plata

While his father watched, a La Plata, Md., boy was struck by an auto and killed yesterday on Route 301 near that community. Another boy was struck and seriously injured by an auto in Arlington.

The La Plata victim was Joseph Higgs, 5 years old, son of Walter Higgs, a farmer. Maryland State police said he was on one side of the highway and started to cross to join three playmates.

They said he was struck by an auto driven by Charles Bramble, 10 Talbot st., Baltimore. Bramble took him to Physicians Memorial Hospital at La Plata, where he was pronounced dead of a skull fracture and internal injuries.

Police said the boy's father was cutting wood 200 yards away and saw the accident. Thomas C. Carrico, State's attorney of Charles County, said Bramble was charged with manslaughter and reckless driving.

James Schlotzhauer, 9, son of Lieut. Col. W. S. Schlotzhauer, 1239 N. Taylor st., Arlington, suffered deep cuts on his legs when he was struck, according to police, by an auto driven by Basil R. Littin, 33, of 111 Woodlawn ave., Falls Church. The accident occurred at Lee hwy. and Washington blvd. The boy was treated at Arlington Hospital and then transferred to Walter Reed Hospital.

In another accident, Marion Overman, 50, of 9609 Hastings dr., Silver Spring, was injured seriously when his car collided with one driven by Walter M. Laign, 26, of 106 Ames rd., Silver Spring, police reported.

The accident took place at the intersection of Piney Branch rd. and East Sligo Creek prky. nw. Two others in Overman's car escaped injury. Laign and his wife Constance, were treated and released at Washington Sanitarium. Overman was admitted with a fractured skull and possible internal injuries.

Mrs. Theresa Frissell, 54, of 426 10th st. ne., suffered head injuries and was taken to Casualty Hospital yesterday as result of an auto accident on the Marlboro Pike, near Brown Station rd., in Maryland. Police said she was a passenger in an auto driven by John T. Schlotter of the same address when it struck a pole.

Safe-Cracking Attempts Foiled In Two Offices

Hardworking burglars attempted to open safes in two offices early yesterday but failed in both instances, according to police.

Siegfried Michaelis, head of a plumbing concern at 319 A st. ne., told police burglars forced the door of his establishment, ransacked his office and knocked the dial off a 350-pound safe, but failed to open it. About $100 was in the safe, he said. The burglars took a small radio.

At the office of the Laborers' (Union) District Council at 200 G st. ne, burglars entered through a second-floor window, apparently with a ladder, and knocked the dial off a 600-pound safe, but failed to open it. There was no money in it, according to William S. Burrus, secretary of the Plasterer Tenders' Union, who made the report.

Irish Veterans Defy Order Banning Lincoln Day Wreath

The running civil war in the ranks of the Irish War Veterans raged to new heights yesterday as the hour drew nigh for honoring, on his birthday today, that alleged Scotch-Irishman, Abraham Lincoln.

Post No. 17 coolly announced plans to lay a wreath at the Memorial.

But National Commander George L. Cassiday warned he would prosecute them if they lay the wreath. Any Irish War Veteran wreath-laying to the Great Man beside the Potomac he'll attend to, said Cassiday.

He has suspended Post 17, said Cassiday. If it lays that wreath or holds that dance St. Patrick's Day at the Wardman Park Hotel, as planned, he will haul the post off to court to answer for its insolence.

"Isn't that silly stuff?" replied William A. Hickey, adjutant of Post No. 17. "We will lay that wreath, man, we will have that dance."

Brief background to battle:

Cassiday has expelled Post 17 from the Irish War Veterans.

Post 17 has expelled Cassiday from membership.

The national board of directors met here this week and suspended Cassiday as national chairman.

Illegal, said Cassiday, because four members of the five who met are from Philadelphia Post No. 23.

Cassiday has expelled Philadelphia Post 23, too.

Board to File Exception in Bus Rate Hike

The Arlington County Board yesterday voted unanimously to file an exception to an Interstate Commerce Commission examiner's recommendation for a 5-cent cash increase on interstate Arnold Bus Line fares.

The board also agreed to hold a thirteenth public hearing on its proposed new master zoning plan at 8 p. m. Friday in the Thomas Jefferson Junior High School, 816 S. Fillmore st.

The board's attorney in the bus rate matter, Lester R. Conley, has until March 1 to file the exception, which will automatically suspend the rate increase scheduled for that date.

Conley told the board he also will soon file a separate complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State Corporation Commission on the bus company's service to county passengers. This action was authorized by the board at a previous meeting.

Conley said Examiner J. J. Williams, who recommended the fare increase, "apparently had clearly disregarded" evidence submitted to him.

The request for a hearing on the master zoning plan, in preparation for the past two years, came from the Arlington Civic Federation. The federation said major changes had been made in the plan since the last public hearing, over a year ago, and asked a final hearing before the board's scheduled adoption of the plan February 25.

In other actions yesterday the board (1) promised a police crackdown on speeders and stop-sign violaters after the Kate Waller Barrett P-TA complained of traffic dangers to school children; (2) "indefinitely" deferred appointment of five members of the Public Utilities Commission to fill vacancies created by a mass resignation last fall; (3) voted to condemn a 3½-acre site for the Aurora Hills playground on S. 28th st. off Fort Scott dr., and (4) voiced unanimous disapproval of any extension of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission over Arlington as the commission is presently constituted.

Springlike Weather Here Again

It was a very nice "winter" day yesterday. But today won't be quite as nice, said the Weather Bureau. It's going to rain.

Throngs of shoppers, heavy traffic, and other springtime phenomena marked the day, according to Metropolitan and Park Police. The Park Police said there was an unusual number of horseback riders out, and many picnickers were in the parks, unusual at this time of the year.

The high temperature was 55 at 3:55 p. m., and the low was 39 at 2:55 a. m. Forecast for today is "increasing cloudiness with highest temperature in the 40's followed by rain Sunday night."

Decision Due Soon On War II Tomb

By John G. Norris
Post Reporter

Should the Unknown Serviceman of World War II occupy the same tomb as the Unknown Soldier of World War I or rest beneath a separate sarcophagus in Arlington?

This is the major question of a number of disputed points now up for final decision by top Government officials. A definite announcement on plans for honoring the war dead of the last war is predicted for this week.

There is one million dollars in the 1951 budget for building and dedicating a tomb for the World War II hero or heroes. The date is likely to be set for next year, and tentative plans provide for ceremonies as impressive as that for the honored veteran of World War I.

Recommendations of the Fine Arts Commission, the Arlington Memorial Amphitheater Commission and Defense officials must be reviewed at a top-level conference planned at the Pentagon this week. Then Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson and President Truman must approve.

Brig. Gen. Louis H. Renfrow, assistant to Johnson, who is handling the matter, said yesterday officials must decide what is the "most suitable final burial spot."

The budget estimate provides $500,000 for a separate tomb.

One plan, Renfrow said, is to place the new tomb directly between the present monument and the steps of the Amphitheater.

A suggestion has been made that the unknown World War II hero be reburied with the World War I soldier.

The question is not one of economy, but of properly fitting the newcomer into Arlington.

The act of June 24, 1946, directed only that he be placed "near or beside the remains of the Unknown American Soldier of the first World War."

The latter was laid to rest on Armistice Day, 1921. He was selected from the unknown dead in four American cemeteries in France.

This time it is expected that the hero will be chosen from among the unknown dead of the nine theaters of the war.

Rock Creek Cemetery

NON-SECTARIAN NON-SPECULATIVE

In 1719 Colonel Bradford gave 100 acres to the Parish of St. Paul's to be held in perpetuity for church purposes. This was St. Paul's first churchyard. Since then it has been greatly enlarged and its name has been changed to Rock Creek Cemetery—but it still manifests the reverent beauty of a typical churchyard . . . and as a churchyard it has been maintained for two and one quarter centuries—a non-sectarian, non-speculative sanctuary in the midst of a busy city.

Lincoln's Farewell Address Remains a Mystery

By Lee Grove
Post Reporter

Everyone agrees that it was a great address that Abraham Lincoln made to his fellow townsmen at Springfield 89 years ago yesterday.

But to this day no one knows exactly what he said, according to Assistant Librarian of Congress David C. Mearns, noted Lincoln authority.

The President-elect's farewell, as he set out for Washington and his first inauguration, was made at the Great Western station. He stood bareheaded on the back platform of the train, and the men in the crowd of perhaps a thousand persons also stood bareheaded.

Some said there were tears in Mr. Lincoln's eyes, and some said there were tears when he had finished in the eyes of those who heard him.

Among those present was the Springfield correspondent of the New York Herald, Henry Willard.

Extemporaneous

As Villard told the story in his Memoirs, more than 40 years later, the newly elected President's talk was "entirely extemporized, and, knowing this, I prevailed upon Mr. Lincoln, immediately after starting [the train ride], to write it out for me on a 'pad.' I sent it over the wires from the first telegraph station. I kept the pencil manuscript for some time, but, unfortunately, lost it in my wanderings in the course of the Civil War."

In a subsequent volume, "Lincoln on the Eve of '61, a Journalist's Story by Henry Villard," his sons, Harold G. and Oswald Garrison Villard, amplified the story. They said that neither Henry "nor Mr. Lincoln knew that there had been a stenographer present, and that his secretary, John Hay, had also made notes of the address."

The Villard story sounds plausible until the texts of the speech are compared.

The prosey version in Henry Villard's Memoirs is not the same that he presumably, as Springfield correspondent, sent to the New York Herald.

And in the Harold and Oswald Villard book they substitute without comment a version almost identical with that of the New York Herald for the version that Henry Villard had given earlier.

Faulty Memory?

Perhaps Henry Villard's memory was faulty when he said that he had the manuscript and lost it during his travels as a Civil War correspondent. In his memoirs he had also described the morning of Lincoln's leavetaking as "a clear, crisp winter day," although every other account says it was raining (or snowing) that morning.

If his memory had not played him false, Henry Villard's lost manuscript has never come to light, and there is no explanation of where he got the version he printed in his memoirs.

Among the papers in the possession of John Nicolay that passed into the possession of Robert Todd Lincoln and now at the Library of Congress is a draft of the Springfield address, which Lincoln started on the train and Nicolay had completed.

When Nicolay and Hay's serialized history of Lincoln appeared in the Century Magazine, they printed the address in a version identical with that of the manuscript now in the Library of Congress. They also appended a note saying: "This address is here correctly printed for the first time, from the original manuscript, having been written down immediately after the train started, partly by Mr. Lincoln's own hand and partly by that of his private secretary from his dictation."

On Pad Paper

Henry Villard has spoken of the address being written on a pad. The manuscript at the Library of Congress is on a sheet of pad paper. Was this the manuscript of which Villard spoke?

If so, and Villard used it when telegraphing the New York Herald, why does the Herald's version contain a sentence not in the manuscript? The sentence is: "In that same Almighty Being I place my reliance for support, and I hope you, my friends, will all pray that I may receive that Divine assistance without which I cannot succeed, but with which success is certain."

Harold and Oswald Villard spoke of "a stenographer being present." Was that the person who supplied the weekly (Springfield) Illinois State Journal with its version? It is possible that the "stenographer" was a reporter who took down in shorthand what was obviously a most dramatic news event in that region.

His Phrasing

If this is true, then the Journal's version would be what the President actually said, and the manuscript what Lincoln thought he had said, or the way, in afterthought, he would have phrased it.

Besides differences of phrasing, the Journal's version contains these sentences: "To you, dear friends, I owe all that I have, all that I am. All the strange chequered past seems to crowd now upon my mind."

But whatever were Lincoln's words, there is no doubt of the feeling expressed in the last sentence of the Journal's account of that day in 1861: "God bless honest Abraham Lincoln."

Lincoln's address, as reported by the Journal, and which has been used by Carl Sandburg and some other biographers, reads:

"Friends, no one who has never been placed in a like position, can understand my feeling at this hour, nor the oppressive sadness I feel at this parting. For more than a quarter of a century I have lived among you, and during all that time I have received nothing but kindness at your hands. Here I have lived from my youth until now I am an old man. Here the most sacred ties of earth were assumed; here all my children were born; and here one of them lies buried. To you, dear friends, I owe all that I have, all that I am. All the strange, chequered past seems to crowd now upon my mind. Today I leave you; I go to assume a task more difficult than that which devolved upon General Washington. Unless the great God who assisted him shall be with and aid me, I must fail. But if the same omniscient mind, and the same Almighty arm that directed and protected him, shall guide and support me, I shall not fail, I shall succeed. Let us all pray that the God of our fathers may not forsake us now. To him I commend you all—permit me to ask that with equal security and faith, you all will invoke His wisdom and guidance for me. With these few words I must leave you—for how long I know not. Friends, one and all, I must now bid you an affectionate farewell."

Judge's Wife Backs Social Integration Rights for Negroes

By The Associated Press

Mrs. J. Waties Waring of Charleston, S. C., wife of a Federal judge, said last night the Nation's Negroes should have civil rights and the privilege of social integration.

"Let them marry white people if that's what they want," she declared.

Mrs. Waring, a native of Detroit, is the wife of the United States District judge who outlawed the white primary in South Carolina. She was interviewed on NBC's television program, "Meet the Press," by four Washington reporters.

"Although I was born in Detroit, I came out of New England, and because my stock is New England you Southerners call me a damned Yankee," she said.

Asked if she caused trouble because she is a New Englander telling the Southerners what to do, Mrs. Waring replied that "it would be better for forward looking Southerners to lead the movement, but no one speaks up. When no one speaks up, then the court has to take over."

"No white person has put his foot in our door since the decision of the judge," she said.

Hundreds Report Seeing Vision of The Virgin Mary

El Rio, Calif., Feb. 11 (AP).—Hundreds of persons reported today that they saw a vision of the Virgin Mary in this small Spanish-American community.

The resulting commotion tied up traffic on U. S. highway 101 50 miles northwest of Los Angeles. The highway patrol reported scores of people from other cities in Ventura County flocked to catch a glimpse of the vision before sundown.

The vision, said to be a life-size image, was first reported by Manuel Reyes, a laborer building a home for his aged mother.

"There she was, the Blessed Virgin, in a purple robe, on the roof and looking at me," Reyes told Jack McHenry, reporter for the Ventura Star Free-Press.

McHenry said the shadowy vision was apparent to him, too, although fainter toward dusk. He said the form was reclining on the roof, head downward.

Father John Fosselman told gathered townspeople it was his feeling that it was just "our imaginations working."

Peach, Cherry Crops Occupy Horticulturists

Martinsburg, W. Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—Peach and cherry production problems occupied most of the attention today at the closing sessions of the West Virginia Horticulture Society's 57th annual convention.

Some 400 producers from the four-State fruit belt of [illegible] Virginia, Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania are attending the meetings.

Gold Star Wives Blast Women's Equal Rights

Atlantic City, N. J., Feb. 11 (AP).—The Gold Star wives of America resolved in a regional convention here today that equal rights for women would "wreck American family life."

The organization, consisting of widows of servicemen killed in World War II, denounced a proposed constitutional amendment which recently passed the Senate.

If it passes the House of Representatives, and is then ratified by 36 State Legislatures, it would provide "equality of rights" between the sexes, nullifying various State laws which now bar women from jury duty and various jobs.

[A new Atlantic City ordinance which forbids women to work as bartenders presumably would go by the boards.]

"Women's place is still in the home," said Mrs. Marie Jordan of Annandale, Va., founder of the group. "If there is one thing that is going to keep the family together it is that all available jobs be given to the men."

The meeting was attended by about 100 women from the New England and Middle Atlantic States.

We are proud of our wages and our working conditions

The public KNOWS that telephone wages are good

This Company has always believed in paying good wages. Our most recent wage survey shows that the wages of telephone people in Washington still compare favorably with wages paid by other firms in this City for work requiring similar knowledge, skill and capacity.

The following table speaks for itself.

Here are the average earnings of telephone people in Washington

Fully Experienced Cable Splicers and Central Office Repairmen	$94.96 A WEEK	$4,957.00 A YEAR
(These earnings include pay for overtime, holiday, Sunday and night work. Employees in these crafts with one year's service average $49.37 a week or $2,577.00 a year; with five years' service, $74.48 a week or $3,888.00 a year.)
Fully Experienced Switchboard Operating Employees	$59.23 A WEEK	$3,092.00 A YEAR
(These earnings include pay for overtime, holiday, Sunday and night work. Operators with one year's service average $44.44 a week or $2,320.00 a year; with five years' service, $53.01 a week or $2,767.00 a year.)
Fully Experienced Business Office Women (Service Representatives)	$62.00 A WEEK	$3,236.00 A YEAR
(Service Representatives with one year's service average $47.59 a week or $2,484.00 a year; with five years' service, $54.21 a week or $2,830.00 a year.)

Half of the telephone people in Washington are fully experienced employees.

The public KNOWS that telephone people enjoy the FINEST working conditions

We are proud of the working conditions in this Company. We welcome public inspection. In the last three years alone, more than 27,000 telephone users visited our central offices in Washington. Thousands of them visit our public offices every month. They have seen for themselves the excellent working conditions which prevail and seeing is believing.

In addition to good wages and good working conditions, telephone people receive regularly scheduled raises in pay, generally at 3, 6 or 12-month intervals, until they reach top pay for their jobs.

They enjoy one of the most generous benefit and pension plans in the Nation, at no cost to the employee.

They have eight paid holidays a year and from one to three weeks' vacation with pay, depending on length of service.

And promotions are made from the ranks.

Telephone people, as well as the public, know that the telephone company is a good place to work. Fifty per cent of our employees have been with this company eight years or longer.

We wouldn't be able to say that if our wages and working conditions were not among the best.

The rates we charge for telephone service in Washington are regulated by the Public Utilities Commission. And any increase in telephone wages would force us to ask that our customers pay an increase in telephone rates—beyond the rate increase which is now pending.

Army Cameras Retrace Brady's Civil War Trail

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

IN THE backwash of battle that streamed into Washington from Bull Run July 22, 1861, moved one dejected and most unmilitary figure. A slightly built little man in a straw hat and long linen duster, with a pointed beard and great walrus mustache, his anything but warlike figure was marked by one martial touch. About his waist was strapped a huge cavalry saber.

This was Mathew B. Brady, portraitist of the Nation's great, a man with a new idea. Brady had deserted his Washington and New York studios to photograph a war; he would be the first man in history to capture on sensitized glass the lights and shadows, the pageantry and horror of battle. Now his idea had collapsed with the Army's hopes of quick and easy victory and, along with the Army, Brady was in retreat.

But not for long. Together with the Army, Mathew Brady built again on the wreckage of First Manassas. While the Army drilled about Washingon under the driving leadership of George B. McClellan, Brady replaced the equipment lost in the Bull Run woods. And when the Army moved again in the spring of 1862, Brady loaded his wagons with his huge box cameras, his heavy tripods, his big glass plates and followed it to Centerville and the Peninsula of Virginia.

In the four years which followed, Brady went along with the Army of the Potomac, recording its series of seemingly inevitable defeats and frustrations. His camera recorded a succession of commanding generals until from the West came a taciturn, cigar-chewing man with an unkempt brown beard, who led it through its bloodiest campaign to Richmond and victory.

In those four years, Brady and his assistants made more than 3500 photographs of camps and troops and battlefields and hospitals and supply depots and, above all, the soldiers of his day. Each negative he made required a laborious process of coating the glass in a darkroom with silver nitrate suspended in collodion, exposing it before the volatile collodion dried, and developing it immediately. Prints were made directly on the paper by exposing it to sunlight.

Despite this time-consuming process, Mathew Brady made pictures of uniform excellence, some of which are not surpassed by the highly developed equipment of today. And he bankrupted himself in the process—following the Army with his wagons and horses, meeting his payroll and purchasing equipment is estimated to have cost more than $100,000. His collection of some 6000 negatives was bought by Congress in 1875 for $27,840 and is now on deposit in the National Archives and in the files of the Signal Corps.

Although Mathew Brady covered considerable territory immediately after the war, going south to Atlanta and an undetermined distance westward, his war photographs are of especial interest to the Washington area. All of the battles of the Army of the Potomac and Pope's Army of Virginia were fought within easy motoring distance of the Capital, and some of the landmarks which Brady pictured still exist.

To capture the modern version of what Brady saw, five men of the armed forces spent two days recently photographing some of Brady's scenes. Headed by Army M/Sergt. Donald Wingfield, who handled the camera, they spent two days in Maryland and Virginia. What they saw, together with Brady's

SURVIVOR—This stone house, still standing where Virginia Highway No. 234 crosses U. S. 29, is the sole survivor of two battles of Bull Run. Around it on July 21, 1861, raged the fight of Evans and Bee against the flanking column of McDowell which came down the Sudley Road on the left. After both battles it served as a hospital for wounded of both sides. In the lower picture, Air Force T/Sergt. Murray Ward (left), Navy PH2 Ralph Seghers and Army M/Sergt. Burnside's men had to move under Longstreet's fire along the little road in the foreground of the top picture and the background of the lower before attempting to cross the narrow structure. Only the split-second arrival of A. P. Hill's Light Division saved Longstreet's line after Burnside got across. Confederates held the heights in background of top picture

Guatemala Is 'Halfway to Poland'

By Fitzhugh Turner

THE United States, too, has a soft underbelly—Central America and the Caribbean—and trouble has developed there. While North America tries to combat communism in Europe and Asia, Latin communism bores in where it hurts.

Personal and ideological hatreds boil up among the presidents and dictators, small fights rock the area and a big explosion, some say, is on the way.

Others say that talk of an explosion is nonsense, that the State Department and the Organization of American States can deal with the danger. But diplomatic pressure has achieved nothing impressive to date.

Cuba and the Dominican Republic are engaged in a running quarrel, Haiti and the Dominican Republic are at each other's throats, Costa Rica and Nicaragua have tangled in wrath. And the self-styled rebellious child among the erstwhile good neighbors, the 110-year-old Republic of Guatemala, threatens to become more of a problem than ever.

GUATEMALA is the volcano-studded little country which, with Cuba, harbors a private army, the Caribbean Legion, dedicated to the overthrow of nearby Governments. In the geographic sense, it is the nearest to the United States of the six Central American republics; in the political sense, it is halfway to Poland.

This reporter has just returned from an investigation into conditions there, a sort of sampling of what goes on. The conclusion: Communism exists in Guatemala (although it is not necessarily Russian Communism nor the most virulent in the world) and the leftist government is about to leap farther left.

The situation is as senseless as it is dangerous. Guatemala has much, and could have everything.

There is a fertile, scenic plateau where the weather is spring the year around. Poinsettias grow tree high. Easter lilies reach quart size without urging. Mayan and Spanish ruins dot the landscape, along with mountains and big fresh-water lakes.

The area is a little less than that of North Carolina, the population (3,643,000) about the same as in that uncrowded State. About 60 percent of the people are Indians, colorful and primitive. Perhaps 200,000 persons of Spanish or other European descent form the property-holding and, normally, the ruling class.

The volcanic soil is incredibly rich. Coffee and bananas are sold to the United States for dollars, and the Guatemalan quetzal is as valuable as the dollar, with which it is freely interchangeable. Abundant production, good prices and close ties with the North American economy have eliminated public debt.

Developers Rebuffed

WITH all this, the country is virtually undeveloped. There is oil in the Peten, where Guatemala juts into the Yucatan Peninsula. American interests in the country would like to expand. New American interests would like to come in. President Truman's Point IV program could work as well there as anywhere in the world. But there is little atmosphere for development rather, suspicion, opposition and rebuff.

Some important investors have pulled out of the country, others have abandoned millions of dollars' worth of improvement plans and still others have refused to come in.

At least part of the reason for this hostility lies in history. The country for 300 years was the seat of repressive Spanish rule in Central America, and for another 100 years of some of the most brutal dictatorships that have sprung up in a dictator-ridden corner of the world. American interests played ball with the dictators, and American diplomacy was hinged to the dollar until the Good Neighbor Policy came along.

It has been only five years since Guatemala became a democracy—near-democracy would be a better term. It is understandable, perhaps, that a new government should turn violently against the past. An extreme turn to the left is less understandable. Except emotionally, no Guatemalan really would like to remove his country from the United States orbit, nor believes that it could be done.

President Juan Jose Arevalo's course has been one of cross purposes. He has improved the lot of Guatemala's ordinary people. He has introduced a labor law, has raised wages, has begun social security and has made a start against illiteracy. But he has attacked the sources of his country's wealth.

Economic development has lagged. Roads have deteriorated so much that the four-wheel drive jeep has become a necessary form of transportation. The government pecks at repairs and pleads lack of funds, yet it is spending 4 million dollars on a site for Central American Olympic games.

Marxist propaganda, meanwhile, is encouraged. "Wall Street imperialism" is denounced at every turn. American little business meets red tape, and big business is kicked around with gusto. The government press gives free space and the government radio free time to leftist attacks on the gringo, and the Communist line, a faithful echo of Moscow, is heard loud in the land.

Spies are everywhere. The government reads the telegrams and even the mail of those Americans (and Guatemalans) it distrusts. No outsider knows which waiters at hotels and restaurants are police "ears."

President Arevalo employs his own agents out of his secret funds of $473,000 a year, and at least one Cabinet minister employs agents to watch for signs of revolt. It may be a good idea; more than 20 revolutions have been plotted in the past few years.

There are other agencies at work against the government. Nicaragua's Anastasio Somoza and the Dominican Republic's Leonidas Trujillo keep constant watch on Dr. Arevalo, who hates them, and on the Caribbean Legion, which is aimed primarily against their two dictatorships. Neighboring Honduras and El Salvador watch for agitators who try to spread Guatemalan ferment to their territories.

There is evidence that both the United States and the British keep an undercover eye on the situation. When a hot foreign issue becomes desirable, Dr. Arevalo whips up Guatemala's claim to adjoining British Honduras, and His Majesty's government maintains Irish troops at Belize to guard against an airborne Caribbean Legion attack.

Only One Friend

OF all the nations of the Western Hemisphere, Guatemala is on intimate terms with only one, Cuba, where there is also a left-wing regime. Relations with Panama, Costa Rica, Haiti, Honduras, El Salvador, the Dominican Republic and Nicaragua range from suspicion to open break.

Relations with the United States have improved a little since Arevalo supplanted an open leftist with a more friendly Foreign Minister. But the new minister, Ismael Gonzales Arevalo, has been heard to complain that he has been surrounded by Communists who attempt to thwart his work.

For many years Arevalo lived in self-imposed exile near Buenos Aires. There he obtained Argentine citizenship and acquired friends who turn up quite often now in Guatemala. Some of them have taken to communism in their dislike of the United States, or to dislike of the United States in their pursuit of communism, and sometimes Arevalo has given them government jobs.

Anti-North American Communist sympathizers, as well, have been installed in important government press and radio posts, and others have risen to power in the political parties and labor unions which give Arevalo his strength. Still others work with the President in his office, and still others have infiltrated the diplomatic service.

Some of these Communists, pro-Communists, Communist sympathizers or whatever may be Soviet agents; this reporter does not pretend to know. Those to whom I talked denied it, or said they cannot be Communists at all, since the constitution outlaws the party in Guatemala.

There is no Soviet espionage network in the country, so far as experts can tell. (There is nothing much for a Russian to spy on.) Nor is there, despite recent furor, a Russian submarine base on the coast. Nor does the Moscow radio concentrate on Guatemala.

A Peculiar Mixture

GUATEMALAN leftism, is is a fair conclusion, is not Russian, but is largely of the peculiar Latin variety, earnest and befuddled rather than cynical, entangling Marxist ideology and Communist propaganda with anti-gringoism, with local nationalism and with the personal politicking traditional in the Latin world.

This does not mean there is no link to Moscow. The nearest Soviet embassy to Guatemala is the one in Mexico City, which also is headquarters for Vicente Lombardo Toledano, the pro-Communist Latin labor leader. Guatemala's labor is allied with Toledano's pro-Communist federation, the C. T. A. L., and through it with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions.

When Soviet propaganda appears in Guatemala, it arrives in company with copies of the C. T. A. L. newspaper, and Toledano's agents move freely back and forth between Guatemala and Mexico. Some seem on intimate terms with President Arevalo. One, for example, was appointed by Arevalo in 1948 to advise the Guatemalan delegation to the Bogota Conference.

A current visitor is Cesar Urrutia Godoy, an exiled Chilean Communist and one of Arevalo's old friends. Godoy passed two or three months in Guatemala last summer trying to organize a United Front for Democratic Liberation, to unseat Caribbean dictators.

Once when two visiting Americans of the CIO made speeches of friendship to the Guatemala railroad union, Godoy followed them to the stand and denounced them as imperialist agents.

"These people have autos and refrigerators and comfortable houses," Godoy declared. "How can they be on your side here?"

Godoy left Guatemala after that to organize the pro-Communist World Peace Congress held at Mexico City in September.

A Blonde 'Witch'

ANOTHER old friend of the President, also a Chilean, is a plumpish, middle-aged blonde named Virginia Bravo Atelier. She formerly was a Chilean cultural attache in Washington; some Americans who have encountered her at work in Guatemala call her "the witch of the coffee country."

President Arevalo gave this rather shrill lady a job in the Ministry of Education about a year and a half ago. She travels around the country lecturing to rural teachers, denounces American-sponsored teacher training as Yankee imperialism, and spreads the party line wherever she goes.

Most active Communist front outside the labor unions is the Democratic Youth Alliance, known by its Spanish language initials as A. J. D. G. Composed largely of sutdents and dupes, A. J. D. G. spreads the Communist line interspersed with cultural programs, has the backing of the government and is headed by Jose H. Zamora, a Salvadorean who holds a government job as the President's publicity chief.

PRESIDENT AREVALO denies that he himself is a Communist, and the general opinion gives him the benefit of the doubt. Objective people, including some of his enemies, say he is a left-wing idealist with a flair for practical politics and with a sincere desire to achieve social progress in Guatemala.

He has included Communists among his supporters, they say, because he is anti-American, because his only real support comes from labor and the left and because he believes he can control them.

It is true that the President has curbed some excesses. With his term about over, however, and with more extreme leftists coming to the fore, it is not clear now whether he is clearly in control of his supporters.

5000 Acres Doomed

ONE of the requirements of President Truman's Point IV program is a favorable climate for American investment. In Guatemala the Government not only has failed to create such a climate but has convinced existing interests that the aim is to drive them out of the country.

Some 250 million dollars is involved, most of it in three large companies.

United Fruit, with 100 million dollars invested, has abandoned a 10 million dollar development program because of the government's attitude; this, by 1951, will return 5000 acres of Atlantic Coast land to jungle and will cost some 4000 Guatemaltecos their jobs. Empresa Electrica, a 12 million dollar subsidiary of Electric Bond & Share, is in danger of expropriation, and the International Railways of Central America, an 89 million dollar property, is engaged in a wage dispute which threatens to make it a losing financial proposition.

The companies, admittedly, have a history of exploitation. They throve in the time of dictators, and played more than a small part in Central American politics. They still operate under concessions dating to those times, and their contracts extend far into the future, granting low taxes in some cases and tax exemptions in others.

But they long since have changed their old ways. An additional requirement of Point IV, the State Department says, is that American investors must exhibit statesmanship abroad.

The Guatemalan companies, then, would like to renegotiate their contracts to make them more acceptable.

United Fruit, for example, already has renegotiated in Honduras and El Salvador, and has made overtures in Guatemala, only to be rebuffed. Guatemalan leaders have made it clear that renegotiation means huge cash payments, 11 million dollars in the case of the railroad. So the companies have determined to stick to their present contracts until discrimination against them ends.

Pay Discrimination

MEANWHILE, the government and labor unions kick them around. Arevalo's labor law provided that agricultural concerns with more than 500 employes must pay time and a half for overtime, against time and a quarter for others, and must grant 10-day vacations, against 5 days for others. Agricultural concerns with more than 500 employes, in Guatemala, means principally the fruit company.

In most of the anti-American, Communist line propaganda in Guatemala, the three big companies are singled out for the harshest adjectives. Some clue to the reason may lie in what Defense Minister Jacobo Arbenz told an American in a drinking moment. "You people are doing things for your workers that we won't be able to do for 50 years," he said. "Thats why I hate you."

The fact is that the American companies pay by far the highest wages in the country, and take the best care of their employes. The railroad pays manual labor $1.67 a day; the government pays 64 cents for equivalent work. United Fruit pays agricultural labor a minimum of $1.36 a day, as opposed to 40 cents paid on government coffee plantations. The fruit company maintains two central hospitals, two dozen infirmaries, 54 schools, recreation halls, commissaries and the like, and even its critics concede its employe housing is the best in the country.

To develop Guatemala, Ismael Gonzales Arevalo, the pro-American Foreign Minister, talks of a World Bank loan for roads and electric power. If a loan is granted, it will be over the objection of United States Ambassador Richard C. Patterson, jr. He has told the government he can recommend no loan until corrective action is taken against injustices to American interests.

A Private Army

BESIDES its Communists, Guatemala has the Caribbean Legion mentioned earlier, a private army of exiles and adventurers with designs against neighboring governments. The Legion had the use of Guatemalan planes, rifles and ammunition in an attempted invasion of the Dominican Republic last year, and it is now assembling small boats at Puerto Barrios, on the Atlantic coast, for another expedition, presumably aimed either at the Dominican Republic or Nicaragua.

The Legion, which has its headquarters in Cuba, is behind much of the uproar in the Caribbean, according to the Organization of American States. Considering its size, this is something of an achievement. For the Legion, between invasions, consisted of no more than 25 to 100 persons, most of them broke.

A few are Communists, others are non-Communist leftists or moderates or rightists, and personal as well as ideological jealousies divide them. Most are Nicaraguans and Dominicans, or exiles from Honduras or El Salvador, although Guatemala, Cuba, Venezuela and even the United States and Britain are represented from time to time. What most have in common is this: that they are out.

Juan Rodriguez, a wealthy Dominican exile, put up most of the money for the attempt against Trujillo, and another Dominican exile, a tough, bearded soldier named Miguel Angel Ramirez, was commander at last account.

.250 Batting Average

LEGION STRATEGY once was fulldress invasion, but this is no longer possible. The force is not strong enough nor can hemisphere opinion be expected to countenance anything as blatant as that. The tactic, rather, is to plot rebellion within the country under attack and to move in simultaneously with the outbreak of revolt.

Results have been fairly dismal, the batting average only .250. Members first came together in 1947, in a large-scale attempt to invade the Dominican Republic from Cuba. The expedition included 11 bombers, two infantry landing boats and about 1100 men. Publicity, undercover United States intervention and the cooperation of certain Cuban government officers broke it up before it left Cuban soil.

Internal dissension helped. At least 10 seperate participants, it developed, expected to be made Dominican President when Trujillo was dead.

In Guatemala City some months later, a group of the rebels hired a United States pilot, James Hurst, to kill General Somoza of Nicaragua from the air. Gen. Emiliano Chamorro, an exiled rightist revolutionary, was to become President. Hurst was ready to load the explosives when Chamorro objected to the choice of a leftist, Edelberto Torres, to be vice president, and the plot fell through.

Shrewd Defense

IT WAS NOT until March, 1948, that the exiles came into their own. Some of them joined with Jose Figueres, a Costa Rican planter, in an uprising against his government. The revolt succeeded. The Caribbean Legion was officially organized, with a coat of arms, headquarters at San Jose, and a scheme to unseat General Somoza next door.

The canny Nicaraguan dictator acted first, however. He started a border fight which brought the Rio pact into action, exposed the legion to publicity and forced it again to disperse.

Last June's expedition was remarkable even in Central America for mismanagement and bad luck, although members of the Guatemalan government helped and allowed Guatemala to be used as the main base of operations.

At least six planes loaded with men and arms took off from Guatemala. Some of the arms were from Guatemala stocks and two of the planes were Guatemalan air force DC-3s with their official markings, T-1 and T-2, only thinly disguised.

One plane crash-landed en route, three were detained when they landed in Mexico to refuel, one missed the rendezvous and only a flying boat reached the goal at Luperon, on the Dominican north coast, on time. The three North Americans and eight Latins aboard found no revolutionaries to meet them, and a Trujillo force hunted them down in the hills and killed all except one, a Dominican.

The Guatemalan government later denied that it participated in the Luperon affair. When this reporter asked a cabinet member why the government harbors the Legion, he replied that this is untrue. But people in and out of the government have friends, he added, and if individuals wish to help individuals with food, transportation or other things, that is their own affair.

Election Worries

A PRESIDENTIAL election is supposed to be held in Guatemala toward the end of this year, but the odds, probably, are no better than 50-50 that it will come off in peace. Most of the country believes that unless he is chosen as the government candidate and is elected, Defense Minister Arbenz will attempt to seize power by force.

This could lead to much bloodshed. For besides Colonel Arbenz, the two strongest men in the country are pro-Communist labor leaders who have staked their futures on an election and many of whose followers are armed. The government itself gave them rifles, some 2000 or 3000, during an attempted revolution last summer.

The labor leaders are Manuel Pinto Usaga and Victor Manuel Gutierrez. In recent weeks they have consolidated Guatemalan unions into a single federation, and have organized labor into a more or less solid national political action committee. They themselves disavow personal political ambitions but hope, they say, to install the candidate they favor in the presidency. Their aim is to see that the new president continues the revolution and puts through agrarian reform.

If the labor candidate should win, the new regime would be even farther left than the present government. Guatemala's neighbors fear that a government will emerge which will take orders from Moscow, and will seek to install communism in Honduras, El Salvador and other countries. Further subversion of the labor movement in Latin America might follow, and, conceivably, destruction of the inter-American system.

These worries are traceable, in part, to fears of Pinto Usaga and Gutierrez. For both men are known Communist sympathizers and opponents of any except the tamest United States financial interests.

Power Is All

A WELL-INFORMED Guatemalan, himself a presidential possibility, believes, however, that Pinto Usaga and Gutierrez will disappear in short order if a strong man takes over. And since the election will be rigged by the government, that strong man is likely to be Arbenz.

The Defense Minister, he says, professes leftist views only because he happens to be a member of a leftist government, and he represents himself as a friend of labor for the same reason. What he really wants is power.

The colonel last summer began to be threatened by the rise to prominence of an old-time partner, Col. Francisco J. Arana, chief of the armed forces, a political moderate and friend of the United States. He was acquiring a large following in the army and among the people, and was talked of as a presidential candidate.

One July day, Colonel Arana learned that Lieutenant Colonel Arbenz had been helping the Caribbean Legion, and that a quantity of Guatemalan government arms had been cached by the Legion at Lake Amatitlan. He drove off to investigate and was ambushed and killed with submachine guns.

The assassins neglected to kill Arana's driver, and the man escaped to name two of the gunmen. One, he said, was Mrs. Arbenz's chauffeur, and the other was Alfonso Martinez, business manager for Colonel Arbenz.

Artillery Battle

The killing set off a revolution by some of Arana's army friends, and fighting raged for two days with weapons as heavy as 105-millimeter artillery. The government won, the revolutionaries fled and nobody bothered to bring the Arana assassins to justice. Rumor a few weeks ago was that Martinez, who is a prominent figure in Guatemala City, was about to be appointed chief of police.

In the army since then, Colonel Arbenz has entrenched himself by placing his supporters in key positions, and by paying bonuses to officers. Guatemala officers make from $50 to $250 a month, and favorites receive from $50 to $125 extra from the Defense Minister.

A new man, Maj. Carlos Paz-Tejada, has taken Colonel Arana's post; he refers to himself as "the unknown soldier," and so far, at least, has done nothing to threaten the Arbenz ambition.

'Berlin Command'

Airlift Thwarted 'Perfect Crime'

An airlift plane takes off from Tempelhof Airport over the heads of German workmen improving the field.

This is the eighth of 12 articles taken from the new book, "Berlin Command," which will be run daily in The Washington Post. The author, Brig. Gen. Frank Howley, battled the Russians for four years, from 1945 to 1949, as deputy commander and then commander of American forces in Berlin.

By Brig. Gen. Frank Howley

THE airlift—"Operation Vittles"—began on June 26.

There is little that I can add here by way of tribute to the magnificent performance of the American and British airmen who made it possible.

They flew in the darkness as well as in the sun, in storms as well as in good weather. Seventy of them were killed. They were heroes, every one, and they saved Berlin.

The airlift was born of necessity, a product of improvisation and inspiration. Its creation overnight was the boldest and most spectacular supply operation in the history of aviation. Yet it had a most modest birth.

On the afternoon of Saturday, June 26, General Clay called a staff conference to discuss the state of the blockade and efforts to break it.

"Frank," he said, "I'm ordering some planes in. There won't be many, but they will be planes. How fast can you get ready to accept them, and what do you want brought in first?"

"We'll accept cargoes as fast as they come in," I replied, "and we'll have flour first, please."

I must admit that at first I was dubious about the practicality of the airlift. I couldn't quite visualize how planes could supply 920,000 German families.

That night we telephoned American zonal headquarters at Frankfurt-am-Main, 220 miles away, and by Monday we had 200 tons of flour to start our new blockade stockpiles.

Still in Warpaint

I WAS down at Tempelhof Airfield that first morning to see the planes arrive.

They were wartime twin-engined C-47 transports—"Gooney Birds," the pilots called them with affectionate contempt. Old, tired and patched, the planes had been hastily collected from military airfields in the western zones of Germany and rushed into the Berlin service. Many still wore their camouflage paint from North Africa. Each plane had brought in 2½ tons of flour in a two-hour flight from Frankfurt.

They wobbled into Templehof, coming down clumsily through the bomb-shattered buildings around the field, a sight that would have made a spick-and-span air parade officer die of apoplexy, but they were the most beautiful things I had ever seen.

As the planes touched down, and bags of flour began to spill out of their bellies, I realized that this was the beginning of something wonderful—a way to crack the blockade. I went back to my office almost breathless with elation, like a man who has made a great discovery and cannot hide his joy.

The perfect crime the Kremlin had planned was doomed. Although the Reds had succeeded in cutting us off completely by land, depriving us of the Autobahn, the railroad and the canals, which they had stipulated we could use when we first entered Berlin, the blockade had one flaw.

The Kremlin had not counted on the airlift. The narrow air corridor from the western zones into Berlin, which had been conceded to us along with the other communication facilities now blocked, was still open. The Reds couldn't close it. Moscow didn't control the skies.

Mass Housekeeping

ONCE the vast possibilities of an airlift became apparent, we sat down to work out plans for developing it. While the men in the air had their problems, we on the ground had ours, too.

With British and French experts, the pick of military government staffs in Berlin, we started to figure out an imponderable no one in history had every attempted.

What was the absolute minimum weight of supplies needed to keep 2,250,000 people alive and contented—so they wouldn't riot—and what should this minimum consist of? If you've ever had a difficult housekeeping problem for a large family, faced with the possibility that some member, dissatisfied with your food, might start throwing dishes at you, then you have a miniature parallel of Berlin on a domestic scale.

It normally took 20,000 tons of supplies to keep the three western sectors running. My plan was to reduce this to 4000 tons a day, the barest minimum to support the occupation authorities on an austerity basis and maintain minimum stockpiles for the German population.

This tonnage included food, coal, medicine and all essentials to feed the people, keep vital industries intact and maintain public services.

British Obdurate

THE THREE western commandants and their corps of experts differed gravely among themselves, although in the end the British and the French were along with us.

Our problem was this: Could we maintain our position in Berlin with 4000 tons a day? After he had studied my figures, General Ganeval of the French army agreed that we could. General Herbert, the English representative, maintained that we couldn't.

Herbert and I had some terrific head-on fights, far beyond mere academic disputes. Tension was high and I considered his defeatist approach destructive to Western unity. Fortunately, the aid and comfort these violent discussions might have brought the Russians never reached them.

At that time the Kommandatura was composed only of the three Western powers.

Record Construction

MANIFESTLY, the daily tonnages we had mapped out for relief of the city needed a correspondingly large volume of air transport, and we had only two airfields—Tempelhof, in our sector, and Gatow, in the British sector. The first step was to provide additional receiving facilities, so the construction of a third field at Tegel, in the French sector, was begun.

German workers completed the project in record time. The other two fields were improved with reinforced and lengthened runways, loading and unloading aprons, ramps, and platforms to increase delivery tonnage. Twenty thousand Germans worked, under our engineers, and worked the clock around, to get the fields ready.

The airlift was a reality by the first week in July, acquiring strength with every succeeding day. That first month, we brought in 50,000 tons of food for civil consumption, a fraction of what we were to achieve when the lift got into its stride, but enough to convince the Russians that we meant business and to prove to the Germans that, if they stood by us, we could feed them.

Black Diamonds

BY rearranging the city's rations, we reduced total daily food requirements to 1178 tons and, at the same time, were able to retain our 36-day reserve stocks.

Before the blockade, we shipped in 6000 tons of coal a day by rail, but we reduced this to an emergency total of 1500 tons a day. Of course, the first air deliveries didn't approach this amount, but our stocks enabled us to carry on until we reached the desired tonnage.

The arrival of the coal planes at Tempelhof was the most popular spectacle in the city. Black diamonds, flown 200 miles in million-dollar military planes, costlier cases than Cartier diamonds ever boasted, became an actuality, not a figure of speech.

The fuel was packed in Army duffel bags, the type of the GI lugs around. We found that these bags didn't get as dirty as bags made of more porous material. To simplify unloading, we tried dropping coal from the bomb bays of B-29s but this type of bombing wasn't as successful as Gen. Curtis LeMay's raids on Japanese cities, and we abandoned it as impractical.

British Liberals Worry Major Parties

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

LONDON—The precise young man in gray striped pants and black coat sat almost primly in his orderly office in Abbey House, the Conservative Party campaign headquarters on Victoria st.

Behind him, on separate hooks, hung his overcoat, Homburg and tightly wound umbrella. He exuded what he himself described as "sober confidence" in the outcome of the British general election.

Apart from the ordinary black telephones on his desk there was a red one, bright as a fire engine, "for urgent incoming calls," he explained. Mr. Anthony Eden rang up while I was there and the precise young man said "Sir," very respectfully, but not obsequiously, and "I'll see to it, sir." Then we resumed our conversation.

"We anticipate," he said in good public school accents, "a majority of a hundred-odd seats in the next Parliament. But, of course, there are imponderables. The Liberals just might mess things up."

At Transport House, the Labor Party headquarters in eminently respectable Smith Square, where at least some of the buildings and perhaps notions of government are more modern than in Victoria st., an elderly, scholarly man in a double-breasted blue serge suit leaned back heavily in his swivel chair as he talked politics.

Books on history, economics and trade unionism lined the walls. The man's desk was piled with unsorted papers. He had bushy brows and a huge head that went well with his massive, Bevinesque body. He looked like John L. Lewis might look if John L. had a publicly perceptible sense of humor or love for fellowmen apart from coal miners.

"We would be greatly disappointed," the big man said, in language no less polished than that of the Tory spokesman, "if we did not return to power with a majority of a hundred-odd seats in the next Parliament. But there are imponderables, you know. Now, take the Liberals . . ."

The Middle Channel

THE POSSIBILITY that large sections of the British electorate, in their desire to find a safe middle channel between the shoals of socialism and the reefs of reaction, might choose the Liberal course, causes both Laborite and Conservative politicians to break out in cold sweat.

Both major parties make a show of confidence in the outcome of the polling February 23. Both publicly profess to believe that the presence of upward of 425 Liberal candidates for the 625 seats being contested favors their particular side.

"Their traditional liberalism," the Laborites say of the Liberals, whose social reforms they have cribbed, "compels them to support us, knowing that votes for their candidates would either be wasted or would help the Tories in."

"The Liberals' fear of Marxism," counter the Conservatives, "is greater than their confidence in a Liberal revival which would give their party the government or than their distaste for conservativism. They will come to us."

February 23 will prove which side—if either—is right. Meanwhile this is certain: The party of Asquith and Lloyd George, with only 10 seats in the recently dissolved Parliament in which Labor held 393 and the Conservatives 189, moribund if not actually dead for more than 30 years, has come creakingly, bravely to its feet, determined to make a fight of it come polling day.

Ably if not inspiringly led by 66-year-old Lawyer Clement Davies, who fought the betrayal at Munich and prevailed on Lloyd George to make the historic "for God's sake go" speech which turned Neville Chamberlain out of office and ended the phony war of 1939-1940, the Liberal Party is making an all-or-nothing stand.

It is going to the country with a program which, while some critics describe it as seeking to be all things to all men, comes closer to fulfilling American concepts of free, democratic life than what Labor offers or what the Tories might dispose—as against what they propose now in the heat of a campaign—when in office.

In the field of foreign affairs, the Liberals promise to (1) take the profit out of arms making, (2) support the American proposals for international control of atomic energy, (3) bend every effort to achieve world government, (4) fight communism by making democracy work, (5) sweep away the encumbrances to world trade down to repealing empire preferences, (6) accept Germany as a competitor rather than continue to permit it to drain Western resources, (7) reform the United Nations and (8) permit Spain's admission to the Council of Europe and the Atlantic Pact only when basic civil liberties have been restored in that country.

On the domestic side, the Liberals propose to (1) encourage farm production by providing cheap credit rather than by socialization, (2) drop all controls and restrictions not essential to the nation's immediate welfare, (3) restore the open shop in labor relations, (4) free the cooperative movement from Labor Party domination, (5) cut the cost of living by raising production and reducing taxation, (6) restore free markets in cotton and other commodities and (7) halt nationalization short of the iron and steel industres and introduce in the areas already socialized inter-area competition and worker-management coownership.

The foreign policy planks in the Liberal platform seem to this correspondent to be clearer than those of either of the major parties. These limited themselves to generalities upholding the U. N., the Marshall Plan, the Atlantic Pact and "security through strength." Neither the Tories nor the Laborites have been quite as forthright as the Liberals on the matter of freeing international trade, the main objective of American economic policy for the remainder of the life of the European Recovery Program.

But on February 23, domestic issues—housing, rationing, taxation and the public health services—and not foreign policy will occupy the attention of orators and voters. And on these issues, however attractive the Liberal program might seem to Americans, the Liberal Party may not have enough to offer the Socialists and too much to suit the Tories.

Interest in the Liberal cause is manifest by overflow meetings and a steady flow of campaign contributions, the bulk of them ranging from five shillings (about 70 cents) on up to five pounds (about $14). Party headquarters said the other day that bigger contributions of 100 pounds and more had been numerous. At any rate, there was no lack of money to pay the 150-pound deposits to put candidates into the field.

The Miraculous

IN THE 1945 election, with 310 candidates running, the Liberals polled about 2,250,000 votes while the Laborites drew nearly 12,000,000 and the Conservatives almost 8,700,000.

"This time," a Liberal spokesman said, "with upwards of 425 candidates running, with more than 500 organizations in being and working hard, we hope to do much better. We hope to obtain many more seats, and we might conceivably achieve the miraculous. We might, that is, obtain a majority or a representation big enough to hold the balance of power in Parliament."

Lack of confidence in themselves is one of the Liberals' greatest handicaps. Asked the direct question: "Would you be likely to vote Liberal if you thought that the Liberals would get a majority?", 38 percent of the British electorate, as measured by a Gallup Poll recently, answered, "Yes."

Another handicap is a prevalent impression that the Liberals, absent so long from the government, have neither the brains nor the ability to govern.

Certainly the Liberals have no giants with the political sex appeal and the proved ability of Labor's Clement Attlee, Herbert Morrison, Sir Hartley Shawcross and Aneurin Bevan or of the Tories' Winston Churchill, Anthony Eden and others.

But the Liberals do have Clem Davies, Lord Samuel, Lord Beveridge (father of the Laborites' welfare state), Sir Archibald Sinclair, Megan Lloyd George (the late former Premier's daughter), Lord Wolverton and young comers like Frank Byers, Air Vice Marshal Bennett and the Foot brothers, Dingle and John, whose third brother, Michael, is a Laborite.

A Poor Press

"IT'S a tough job getting the oldsters' names into the papers," a Liberal spokesman said at party headquarters in eminently respectable Gayfere st., "and more difficult still obtaining publicity for the youngsters. The former have been in the background too long and the latter—well, nobody ever heard of them unless they've been in Parliament."

But, for all their difficulties, the Liberals are almost certain to gain strength in some Welsh constituencies and in Scotland and the North Country.

At least one index of the Liberal potentialities could be seen in the Conservatives' efforts to disuade Liberal candidates from running at all and, later, in deliberate Tory efforts, led by the astute Winston Churchill, to attract Liberal support for the Tory cause.

Davies and the party have officially refused Tory overtures. But no one can tell what may happen at the ward level—how many Liberals might swing their support to Conservative candidates at the last moment if faced with certain defeat.

Weighing his party's chances as he sat surrounded by telephones and neat stacks of clippings in his Gayfere office, an official provided one important—if unintentional—clue.

"The British electorate has become accustomed," he said "to choosing between black and white. And, you know, we are so gray."

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Gentlemen While Away a Fortnight

GALLERY GLIMPSES

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

IF YOU'VE NOTICED a slowdown at the Capitol, it's by "Gentlemen's Agreement."

Congresses turn over, reform movements come and go, but most of the Nation's legislative business is still done that way.

All the "modernization" movements pooled into one never made a dent in the "Gentlemen's Agreement."

This particular "agreement" roughly covers a two-week period from February 6 to 20. During that period, by common consent of the gentlemen on both sides of the aisle, no business of a nationally "controversial" nature has been or will be considered by the Senate.

The period roughly covers the span of the Republican Lincoln Day and the Democratic Jefferson-Jackson Day celebrations.

Every year, patron saints of both parties thus become a gentlemanly part of the agreement.

Senate Democratic Leader Scott W. Lucas, zealous to clear legislative slates, figured something was wrong with such a system, returned to Washington determined to do something about it. He brashly proposed that the Senate keep its nose to the grindstone through both party fete days, by a system of "live pairs." In other words, those Senators who had to go could just leave, assured that their votes would still count. Meanwhile the Senate would get on with its work.

The Senate responded with raised eyebrows. Rather than be stuck with no Senate to lead, Lucas capitulated.

On the House side, even crusading civil rights advocates, beating the drums for a chance to call up the FEPC bill, knuckled under to the annual custom.

Normally, tomorrow would be a formal "discharge day" in the House and their first chance in weeks to try to call up the controversial measure. The FEPCers took one look at the calendar, decided not to make the effort.

You see, they need Republican signatures on that "discharge" petition. And Monday is more than "discharge day"—it's the day after Lincoln's birthday.

Besides, gentlemen prefer gentlemen's agreements.

Elephant Gun Ready

GREEN-WITH-ENVY Democrats have called out their top gag talent to poke fun at the GOP's gargantuan "box special" Lincoln Day supper.

None other than the "Veep" will discuss the intraparty dinner rivalry when the Democrats crowd Jackson-Jefferson Day tables at the National Guard Armory Thursday night.

Alben Barkley has been rehearsing all week, tried out a few simple gags on a Boston audience Tuesday night.

"That wasn't a Lincoln Day dinner," said Barkley. "It was a memorial service for the Republican Party, with all 12,000 members present."

The "Veep" reserved his major effort for the Republican "Declaration of Party Principles," released Monday after weeks of party conference.

"After all of that work, what did they come up with?" said Barkley. "Why, that old 1776 quote from Patrick Henry, 'Give me liberty or give me death.'"

Republicans meanwhile were sitting up nights thinking up cracks on the Democratic $100-a-plate special.

Their best effort to date:

"Question—What's the difference between a Lincoln Day supper and a Jackson-Jefferson Day dinner?

"Answer—Ninety-nine dollars!"

Small Town Reunion

THIS is a story of the indeed strange ways of fate.

Bernard, Charles and Claude spend their childhood in the little town of Alton, in northwestern Iowa, where their pioneer forebears a century ago planted a "Little Holland" in America.

In winter they tramped miles to school in subzero weather. In the spring, they rejoiced with their elders in the annual tulip festival. But mostly they loved summer on the prairies, and American sports. Bernard, the oldest, became a sprinter and ball player of renown.

Then Bernard and Charles left Alton, each bent on a separate career. Bernard went to Grinnell College, the University of Michigan, Princeton University and Hartford Theological Seminary. In 1911 he came to Washington as an ordained Presbyterian minster.

Claude studied stenography, worked at court reporting in Chicago and Detroit. Then he, too, came to Washington, to try his hand in rapid Capitol debates.

Charles specialized in law at the University of Iowa, then returned to Alton to hang out a shingle. He became county attorney of Sioux County, was elected to the State Senate and in time became its president pro tempore. Then seven years ago he, too, packed up his bags and headed for Washington, as the Congressman from Iowa's Eighth District.

Last month one of their number was elected chaplain of the House, and the trio was formally united.

You've guessed it. The new chaplain, of course, is the Rev. Bernard Braskamp, pastor of Gunton Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church.

"Charles" is now Representative Charles B. Hoeven (R., Iowa), and the third member of the reunited threesome is Claude S. Schekel, an official reporter of House debates.

Once, last session, when Braskamp was substituting as chaplain, the inevitable happened. Dr. Braskamp opened the House with prayer, Representative Hoeven made a one-minute speech and Schekel, as official reporter, duly set down the remarks of both former chums.

"It could only happen in America," said Hoeven.

Tough Roll Call

WHAT would you do if you were a United States Senator?

That simple question has stumped many a Senate senior, and Connecticut's Senator William Benton is only a freshman.

In private life, Benton helps publish a set of books that has all the answers—the Encyclopedia Britannica. But for the jackpot answer to the jackpot question, Benton turned not to those scholarly tomes but to the high school children of Connecticut.

For the best letter on the subject, he offered the winning student a trip to Washington at the Senator's expense, accompanied by the teacher of his or her choice.

"They will be judged chiefly on ideas—that is, on the young people's ideas of what they would do if they were Senator," said Benton.

Members of the faculty of the Capitol school for congressional page boys will serve as judges. The initial "if you were in my shoes" contest closes today, but Benton likes the idea so well he may try it again.

"There is a lot we can learn from our children in seeking honest, straightforward comments on the kind of world they are inheriting from their elders," he explained.

"This is frankly an experiment to kindle the interest of Connecticut boys and girls in the conduct of their American Government."

Family Friends

CONNECTICUT'S Representative John Andrew McGuire, who runs a general insurance business, has a "birthday reminder" system all his own, carried over from his insurance practice.

In playful moments, he likes to try it out on House colleagues. Not a Congressman is permitted to forget when his wife has a birthday if McGuire has the date, and he has thousands on file.

Recently McGuire extended operations to the congressional press galleries. Leonard Williams of David Lawrence Associates, was the first victim. On January 25, his wife's birthday, Williams ran into "reminders" all over the Capitol.

At every stop, the following "urgent" message was relayed: "Mr. Williams—This is your wife's birthday!"

Late in the day, McGuire personally called the newsman.

"Thanks," said the new birthday-conscious Williams, "but this is one time I remembered."

"That wasn't a Lincoln Day dinner; it was a memorial service," said a well-known Democrat. The smiles ARE rather few in this Armory photo, aren't they?

Peasants Can Be Red Frankenstein

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

EASTERN EUROPE'S peasants are providing Soviet leaders with a threat which neither arms nor political bribes may ever dissipate.

Long-suffering pawns of many forces throughout history, these masses appear to be increasingly restive under bolshevism. And the key to this restiveness is their age-old yearning to be masters of their own land as well as of themselves.

One first-hand report states that Russia's "krestyanstvo" or peasantry has become particularly explosive. More than any satellite group, the Russian peasant would be the prime source of reaction to bolshevism should the Soviet Union ever suffer any serious setbacks.

Furthermore, any open reaction would quickly gain adherents from many other dissident quarters—even from the Communist Party.

At present, of course, the state police have things well in control. The most hopeful peasants realize this, and resent their helplessness.

Politically Awakened

MORE THAN anything else, the Soviet peasants are said to feel that they have been tricked by the Communist Party into a new kind of serfdom. Where once they were owned like cattle by a landed gentry, they now belong to a new and more ruthless master, the state.

This new master, however, has unwittingly taught them political awareness while striving to force them into Marxist patterns. And now, despite all kinds of propaganda to the contrary, the Soviet peasant can guess if not see the hopelessness of his future.

The state, rather than "withering away" as forecast by Lenin, is binding the peasant tighter and tighter to impersonal political mechanisms. He senses that the urban working membership of the Communist Party never intended to share state power with any other class, least of all the peasants.

On this score, incidentally, no better proof could any peasant find than the widely circulated indiscretion of Jozsef Revai, Hungary's foremost Marxian ideologist who otherwise is Minister of People's Culture.

In a speech prepared for leading members of the Hungarian Workers Party (Communist), Revai frankly stated that ". . . we must liquidate the concept that the working class shares its power with other classes."

In further emphasizing that "power is exclusively possessed by the working class," Revai cautioned his special audience that this fact "isn't to be chattered about everywhere."

"We do not intend to mislead the peasantry," he explained, "but, equally, (we) don't wish to strengthen reactionary elements."

Got Into Print

THE speech, for some inconceivable reason, subsequently appeared in the March-April, 1949, issue of Tarsadalmi Szemle, the party's sociological monthly review. But no sooner was it off the presses than the Hungarian government hastily confiscated every copy without explanation.

About this time Hungarian Communists stepped up their campaign to split the peasantry into three classes, each hostile to the other. A Bolshevik tactic originally prescribed by Lenin, the Hungarian peasants were divided into (1) the poor peasantry, (2) the medium peasantry and (3) the so-called kulaks or rich farmers.

This done, the poor peasantry was turned against the kulaks while the medium peasants were offered the choice of joining in the attack or losing whatever claim to land they might have. All of this, incidentally, was classed as necessary to end capitalist exploitation.

Soon after, to finish the job along prescribed lines, the Communist Party merged all peasant organizations into one body called DEFOSZ, the National Union of Working Peasants and Agricultural Laborers. While actual control was held by the party, the police work and general management was turned over to the agricultural laborers "as the most revolutionary class among the peasantry."

Polish Paradox

A SIMILAR CONSOLIDATION of peasant groups occurred in Poland last December when the Polish Peasant Party (P. S. L.) and the Peasant Party (S. L.) became the United Peasant Party (Z. S. L.). But, unlike other such moves within the Iron Curtain, the Polish peasant program is paradoxically viewed by Moscow as both a promise and a threat.

As a promise, the consolidation offers Moscow control of a great political force. The role set for Poland's peasants was defined by President Boleslaw Bierut in announcing the formation of the United Peasant Party.

"It is the task of the people's power," said Bierut, "to build a socialist system. The United Peasant Party has a great part to play in carrying out this task.

"Based on the unity of the peasant movement, it will bring to the peasant masses the fiery torch of ideals of struggle for progress and peace of friendship between nations building a better life under the guidance of the Soviet Union."

Such declarations, however, cannot hide the Polish peasant's stubborn resistance to all-out collectivization. And Poland's home-grown Communists appear reluctant to impose collectivization by brutal repression.

The Better Life

TO THE KREMLIN of course, this situation represents an unresolved threat, a dangerous example to Soviet peasants who have experienced brutal repression and are now chafing for revenge.

Then, too, while Poland's peasants seem to be comparatively better off without full Sovietization, the Russian peasant sees his wants still unmet. Still poor, still landless, he is looking to Moscow more and more for an answer.

Many articles in the Soviet press, printed to show off freedom of expression, reveal unbelievable conditions in the Russian countryside.

One report told of a country store whose limited stock included assortments of dresses but all of them the same size. The manager explained to his customers that the factory from which he received his stock was geared to turn out only this one size.

Brazilian Japs Holding 'Fort

RIO DE JANEIRO (ONA).—Gen. Douglas MacArthur recently permitted a high official of the Tokyo Foreign Ministry to come to the Brazilian capital for the purpose of making certain down-to-earth representations to leaders of the Japanese colony of 170,000. These Orientals have substantial investments in Brazilian banks, utilities, coffee plantations and the like. They are also fervent patriots, fanatically loyal to Emperor Hirohito.

In recent months these wealthy Japanese have been writing querulous letters to their erstwhile Tokyo associates, asking why their repeated demands for additional investment funds had remained unanswered. These demands finally led to the dispatch of the Tokyo emissary.

He imparted some disillusioning facts of life to the Japanese colony. The Land of the Rising Sun was soundly thrashed in World War II, he said; indeed it capitulated to the Allies almost 4½ years ago.

The Japanese leaders here pityingly told the emissary he was out of his mind. "That's just American propaganda," they scoffed, and sent him back to Tokyo.

Salty Description Of the Labor Party

FUNCHAL, Madeira Islands, (ONA).—Shortly before he ended his holiday here, upon Prime Minister Attlee's announcement that the British general election would be held February 23, Winston Churchill was asked by a newspaperman his candid opinion of the Labor Party leaders.

"Let me answer you this way," Churchill replied. "Do you know who was the first trade unionist?"

The newspaper wretch said that the answer to that one was not included in his store of useless information.

"Well, my inquisitive young colleague," Churchill remarked, "it was Christopher Columbus. He sailed the ocean blue without knowing where he was going, he arrived at a place he didn't recognize—and, finally, he did it all at someone else's expense. That's the British Labor Party in a nutshell."

Lincoln

Lincoln is most revered today for his greatness of soul. In his own time he was a controversial figure. His mistakes in prosecuting the Civil War loomed large, and his assumption of extraordinary powers in that hour of the Nation's great peril alarmed many people. But Lincoln had a true devotion to the cause of ordered liberty. His sense of responsibility grew with his power and was always a check upon it. While he was often called a dictator, he remained in his heart and in his actions a humble servant of the people. He had that rare quality of statesmanship which enabled him to subordinate his own feelings to the general good—to forgo vindication of himself for the sake of better serving his country.

When Chief Justice Taney died, Lincoln chose as Taney's successor a man usually regarded as his (Lincoln's) personal enemy. Long before this he had said that Salmon P. Chase would make a better Chief Justice than any other man in the Union. "Chase," he had said, "is about one and a half times bigger than any other man I ever knew." But as a member of Lincoln's Cabinet, Chase had taken an imperious attitude toward the President. His harsh and sometimes insulting comments about Lincoln are a part of history. A few days before the appointment was made Lincoln told a friend, "Mr. Chase's enemies have been appealing to the lowest and meanest of my feelings. They report illnatured remarks of his upon me and my Administration. If it were true that he made them, I could not be so base as to allow the fact to influence me in the selection of a man for the Chief Justiceship."

Today Lincoln's "gentleness of soul," as Lord Halifax called it, is remembered far better than Chase's intellect, learning, and ambition. We venerate him as a symbol of the human spirit uncorrupted by power. His failings tend to fade out of the picture that a grateful Nation retains, and Lincoln's unique combination of meekness and strength, of flexibility and integrity, stands out as the finest flower of our political heritage.

British Election

Great Britain's parliamentary election campaigns are attracting a good deal of interest in the United States not only because of the similarity of some of the issues on opposite sides of the Atlantic but also in part because of the dissimilarity of the electoral machinery. Probably the most striking contrast is in the matter of timing. Our congressional and presidential campaigns string out over several months, with different States following a confusing variety of different schedules. In Britain the campaign can officially last for only three weeks, although precampaign activities may begin several months before the date believed likely to be selected for the election. By American standards, the present British campaign is just beginning to warm up, yet the election will take place on February 23.

The irregularity of British elections also stands out in sharp contrast to the unvarying American routine of holding a presidential contest in November of every fourth year and congressional elections in November every other year. In Britain a general election may occur any time that Parliament is dissolved, and it can be dissolved if the government has suffered a defeat on a major issue or if the government wishes to advocate an entirely new line of policy. If Parliament is not dissolved for these reasons, its members may hold office for a maximum of five years without reelection.

Candidates for the House of Commons are nominated in each of 625 constituencies. The old practice of giving special representation to the "business vote" and the "university vote" was abolished in 1948. Local "party associations" usually choose candidates in each constituency, but there is no requirement, as in the United States, that the candidate be a resident of his district. If no suitable local candidate can be found, the party may "adopt" a person of prominence suggested by the national party. These adoptions are usually agreed upon some months before the election so that the candidate may familiarize himself with local affairs, which is called "nursing" his constituency. Any person may offer himself for nomination, but he will have to deposit 150 pounds and forfeit it if he fails to poll at least one eighth of the total votes cast.

Each candidate must appoint an election agent through whom all campaign expenditures must be paid. All candidates are permitted free use of the mails for circulation of their statements of policy or platforms. In the United States, only Congressmen in office have the advantage of the franking privilege, which results in unwarranted discrimination. British voters are registered by means of a house-to-house canvass. When they go to the polls they find no voting machines, but those who cannot go to the polls may vote by mail or proxy. It is characteristic of the British that, on election night, there is no wild excitement while returns dribble in and no conceding of elections. Public announcement of the returns is withheld until the counting is complete.

Concentration Camps

The Rules Committee of the House, despite the fact that it has much more urgent business on its docket, has been asked again to grant a rule on a measure repeatedly presented to Congress by Representative Hobbs ever since 1939, and commonly and justifiably known as the concentration camp bill. This measure would amend existing law to permit indefinite detention of deportable aliens by the Attorney General and to deprive the courts of virtually all jurisdiction to review administrative decisions of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

The pretext for this proposal is that there are subversive aliens in the country—actually about 100—who have been declared deportable but cannot be deported because the country in which they hold citizenship or from which they came will not receive them. The Hobbs bill, favorably reported by a majority of the House Judiciary Committee, would authorize the Attorney General to deport these persons to any other country willing to accept them. Moreover, it would give him this power not only in respect of subversive or criminal deportables but also in respect of all the persons subject to deportation including even bona fide business visitors who had been guilty of nothing graver than overstaying their leave. This might mean deportation to a country where the language and customs were unknown to the deportee or, indeed, to a country such as the Soviet Union where, if he had offended the authorities, his life would be endangered.

In the case of aliens who could not be deported anywhere, the Attorney General would be given discretion under the Hobbs bill either to release them under bond and subject to stringent supervision of his own prescription or to detain them indefinitely. The former course would entail, under the terms of the bill, a requirement that the alien submit to medical and psychiatric examination and that he give information under oath as to his habits, associations and activities. The latter course would mean nothing less than establishment in the United States of concentration camps and incarceration in them without trial, and perhaps for life, of persons who had committed no criminal or even wrongful act.

As the minority report of the Judiciary Committee observed, "This legislation is at variance with American traditions of due process. It smacks too much of the lettres de cachet of the Bourbon monarchs or the concentration camps of totalitarian governments." This departure from constitutional concepts is rendered no less dangerous by the fact that it is applied in this instance to aliens who are without the rights of citizenship. Restraints on freedom are commonly inaugurated in relation to such helpless groups. The doctrine that persons may be imprisoned without trial should be given no root whatever in American soil.

No doubt it is because this measure is repugnant to American judicial principles that it includes provisions for stripping the courts of authority over the Immigration and Naturalization Service. That agency would be exempted from the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act and the Declaratory Judgment Act. And the courts would be forbidden to release aliens on bond in all immigration cases until final decision by the Supreme Court in the alien's favor. District and Circuit Courts would be bereft of power to release an alien, even when they had ruled that his detention was illegal, if the Government decided to appeal. The intent behind this, as the majority report brashly put it, is to prevent "possible inroads by the judiciary." The judiciary in a free society is needed to forbid arbitrary administrative action—and peculiarly so where personal liberty is involved, as in deportation proceedings.

Coaches To Europe

In denying Pan American Airlines' proposal for charter flights to Rome during Holy Year, the Civil Aeronautics Board acted to uphold the integrity of its regular route certificates. There was danger that the charter flights would divert traffic from regularly scheduled services, especially those of Trans-World Airline, which is the only American carrier certificated to Rome. Moreover, the CAB found that the Panam arrangement with Felix Roma, the Catholic travel agency, would not have produced genuine group travel within the meaning of the term. Finally, the board found that there was substantial possibility that the low-fare all-expense tours would lose money and incur demands for additional mail pay subsidy.

The latter point is contested by Pan American; nevertheless, it is the Government that would have to foot the bill if estimates proved wrong, and we believe the CAB acted properly. However, there still remains the question of how to exploit the potential of religious travel to Rome during 1950. In response to the competition proffered by Panam, TWA instituted an even cheaper all-expense tour—with how much economic justification it is hard to say. But this rate ends in the spring at the beginning of the heavy travel season. The CAB has authorized both scheduled and nonscheduled carriers to apply for irregular charter service to Rome, but only one nonscheduled application is pending.

The basic conflict boils down to regulation versus competition. From the standpoint of regulation, the CAB's primary interest is to insure that TWA's certificate is protected and that claims for mail pay are at a minimum. But protection from competition has its disadvantages. Although TWA has made provision for some extra seats, there are indications that its management has been slow to appreciate the potential. There certainly ought to be a profitable additional market for low-fare coach travel to Europe without first-class frills, especially during Holy Year. We think this possibility offers an opportunity for the CAB to do a little nudging, with the distinct understanding that such additional service would have to stand on its own feet and would have no recourse for subsidy.

Transit Economics

It is a marvelous thing to behold how governmental ownership is held out as the answer to the revenue problems of the Capital Transit Co. Representative Arthur G. Klein, for example, has introduced a resolution calling for an investigation into the feasibility of purchase and operation of Capital Transit by the District government.

Certainly the experience of other cities indicates no magic in governmental operation of transportation facilities. Public ownership at its best provides little stimulus for efficiency, and at its worst it is a haven for all sorts of political manipulation. Nor is there any reason to believe that public ownership would make the utility less subject to wage demands or other rising operating costs. Municipal ownership in New York merely served as a means of kidding the public, for retention of the 5-cent subway fare as a political sop resulted until recently in millions of dollars of public subsidy.

One serious question is raised, however, by the clamor for public ownership: Where does Capital Transit go from here? The spiral of increased fares and declining patronage cannot be continued much longer without substantial impairment both of the stability of Capital Transit and the public interest. While we believe that the Public Utilities Commission should scrutinize the present proposed fare increase carefully—and such scrutiny should include unexploited sources of revenue, the company's surplus, the factors that led to outside purchase and the relation of its dividend rate to the present value of its stock—there still is little question that with the recent wage increase the company will lose money. Even the possibility of a tax refund cannot obscure the fact that a deficit is in view unless some fare adjustment is made.

There is no guarantee, however, that additional fares will be more than a temporary palliative. Hence we believe it would be in the public interest to have an impartial study of the transit operation, either by the PUC or by a body of experts appointed by the Commissioners, to make concrete recommendations as to sound future policy. One obvious inequity which might be eliminated as the result of such a study is the 3-cent school fare set by Congress. Beyond this, it would be well to have an examination of the possibility of some sort of tax reduction as a means of retaining private management.

Rain To Order

Dr. Irving Langmuir has been telling a group of aeronautical engineers in New York City how he had artificially produced a 160-billion-gallon rainstorm out in the New Mexican desert near Albuquerque last October, and last summer had produced a 320-billion-gallon storm. There was an intense interest in all this, because in New York nowadays water is almost as scarce as in the New Mexican desert. Either of the artificial storms that he mentioned would have sufficed to fill up all the reservoirs. Incidentally, Dr. Langmuir mentioned that the price of a first-class rainstorm, so far as the cost of materials is concerned, is only $20. To most of his listeners it sounded like a bargain.

Hence, when Dr. Langmuir's statements were published in the newspapers, the general comment was: "Well, what's the guy waiting for; why doesn't somebody give him 20 bucks and let him make us some rain up at Croton?" And when the question was put directly to Dr. Langmuir, he said it might be a good idea at that. And Dr. F. W. Reichelderfer, head of the Weather Bureau, said if Dr. Langmuir's methods of rain-making worked in the West they ought to work here.

However, opinions among the meteorological brethren appear to differ about how much success the General Electric weather-makers have really had. Another argument is whether the rain produced in some of these experiments mightn't have belonged to some other people than those who got it. In the present stage of the technique, as we understand it, in order to produce the rain you must have at least some clouds to start with. But who can say that a set of clouds over New Mexico might not, if they were let alone, have drifted over New Mexico or Texas and condensed there? In case of a prolonged drought in some area adjacent to an area of artificially induced rainfall this might make for bad feeling, and the question might make a good many headaches for the courts.

A BROKEN HEART TOUCH LIGHTLY

A broken heart touch lightly:
Such proud, taut hearts can bear so little;
The frigid years have made them brittle,
And grief has held them tightly.

Touch broken hearts but if you must:
Like frozen blossoms bright in space
They keep the semblance of their grace
Till harsh hands fall. They are but dust.

Board of Trade Rule

The other evening I heard a debate on "Why Home Rule for Washington" at the Palisades Citizens Association. Dr. George B. Galloway ably upheld the affirmative with irrefutable arguments drawn from American history and the logic of democracy. Mrs. Maurice L. Nee, speaking in opposition to the Kefauver bill, asked his audience to believe that home rule and national representation are inseparable and identical, although members of Congress from the District of Columbia would not perform any of those local legislative or administrative functions which are the essence of home rule.

Why do otherwise honest and honorable men stoop to these obstructive tactics? Why do spokesmen for the Washington Board of Trade go on stultifying their intellects and debasing their integrity in this way? Because they see in home rule for Washington via a locally elected city council a serious challenge to that busines-class control system which heads up here in the top directorate of the Board of Trade.

The directors of the Trade Board constitute a coalition of the business and financial interests of the city which has been the invisible government of Washington for many years. Their control is, at many points, unconscious, and where conscious, it is well-meaning and "public-spirited," as businessmen interpret that concept. They tend to identify public welfare with business-class welfare.

But there are many other elements in the community which the business leaders do not truly represent, which resent the autocratic and undemocratic system of business-class control, and which are demanding the right to be represented in the councils of the city. From the viewpoint of both legislative efficiency and justice for the citizens of the District, such a system is indefensible, and the demands for genuine home rule are becoming ever more insistent. The Senate has done its part in passing the Kefauver bill. Its fate is now in the lap of the House of Representatives.

"Potato Bugs"

Your February 2 editorial, "Potato Bugs," stating that one factor in potato surpluses is a kind of waning fashion (as though eating is a fad and not a necessity) is turning an editorial blind side to the startling fact that unemployment in some sections has exhausted relief funds. Why then destroy good food when we urgently need it to feed people on relief.

Granting your point (about potatoes falling into disfavor progressively in recent years) how do you explain the vast spoilage of surplus butter and the even vaster waste of eggs paid for with taxpayers' money? Has the "style" changed in the matter of eating butter and eggs?

Here in Cincinnati just a week ago the city decided it must lop off 1000 relief cases at once because Cincinnati has no more money with which to feed them.

To Cincinnati's experience add that of at least a score of other large cities and you very nearly balance the "surplus" of potatoes, eggs and butter against the "demand."

So savage and insane a policy as this must end in disaster for large segments of the population—and I mean not only farmers but those who buy what farms produce.

"Tax on Symphonies"

Re your editorial of February 7, "Tax On Symphonies":

You state that the orchestra fund is 50 percent undersubscribed, partly due to a shortage of volunteer canvassers. Perhaps the reluctance of Washingtonians to canvass and otherwise boost the drive is due to a flaw in the campaign organization.

If a conclusion were to be drawn exclusively from publicity given the drive, it would be that the symphony is supported solely through the sweat of Washington "society," and has, in fact, become the basis for a select little club. Sunday society pages bear this out.

Despite the heavy donations that may result from socialites strategically placed on committees, money must come from our more average citizens or there will be no symphony. Perhaps it is too late this year. But a few feature stories describing those who solicit after a grueling day in the office or kitchen—instead of those who discuss "policy" at afternoon teas—would give the National Symphony sustaining fund a much-needed shot in the arm.

How To Make Tea

I rejoice that someone has at last made public a more or less correct method of making tea. I refer of course to Mr. Robert Waithman (letter appeared February 6).

"A teaspoon to a cup and one for the pot." That rule is basic, absolute, unconditional.

But we ought not to consider as mere "refinements" certain matters that are essential. The teapot must be of earthenware, not of silver, aluminum, or china. The tea must never come into contact with fabric or with metal.

Fresh, undoctored well water is best, brought to a boil. By no means must it be reboiled water. Pour boiling water into the pot, swish well, and pour out. Thrust the spoon into the tea caddy and lift, pausing momentarily for excess tea leaves to fall off, and when the tea leaves have assumed a mound-like appearance, that is to say, when slopes have reached the natural angle of repose, the leaves are dropped into the teapot. The teapot is brought to the tea kettle for a very real reason. The water must be poured over the tea leaves in a bubbling condition, obviating the extra labor of stirring with a spoon. However tempting the aroma, cover the pot immediately. Then place the tea-cozy over the teapot.

The tea must steep a leisurely length of time, and eventually be poured into thin, translucent china teacups. Then imbibed, with or without.

"Legion Blast"

I have read with interest your editorial of February 8 entitled "Legion Blast."

You are, of course, entitled to have and publish opinions that differ with those expressed by members of the American Legion. However, I do not ask you to consider whether you are actually giving your readers a fair opportunity to form their own opinions. Have you ever published a fair statement, with reasons, of the Legion's objections to the Hoover Report?

You have apprised your readers of the fact that we do question the merits of some of the Hoover recommendations. You have, for your own purposes, selected and printed certain language which you deem ill-advised and not grounded in truth. But have you ever really given your readers a full statement from the veterans' point of view?

We veterans are not infallible. Our actions and ideas are rightfully entitled to be scrutinized and, if desired, criticized by the press. We ask only the right to be heard—and then judged by the people upon a basis of merit.

A few words taken away from their context often serve to give a wholly erroneous impression. We suggest you have left an impression that we oppose the Hoover Report for personal reasons based upon a charge of bad faith. Actually, motives—whether good or bad—are relatively unimportant. Results of a proposal are the true basis upon which to judge its merit.

LEE WARD,
Department Commander of Arkansas, the American Legion.
Paragould, Ark.

Editor's Note: Legion Commander Craig's criticisms of the Hoover recommendations were published at length in the February 7 issue of The Washington Post.

I could not resist a comment on the amazing speech made by George N. Craig, American Legion national commander, as reported in your issue of February 7. The speech is part of the Legion's campaign to sabotage the Hoover Commission recommendations for economies in the Veterans' Administration. I worked for the commission and know that not only the good of the veteran but our national budget were factors in the suggested reforms.

The almost ludicrous character of Commander Craig's remarks on the dangers of "political government and pork barrel raids" in reference to veterans' hospitals leads one to comment "Whose pork barrel raids?" It is the very tactics of groups like the Legion which have brought pressure to bear on our Congressmen and have led to the present wasteful and duplicatory Federal system of hospitals in which service-connected ailments form but a small percentage of the ills treated.

Millions could be saved by putting the Hoover recommendations into effect and the veteran wouldn't suffer one iota. A man in a hospital gown is the same whether a veteran or a man on active duty—and the Hoover program would create a top-notch Federal medical service which would give good care to all persons for whom the Government should care.

The allegation that the Hoover study seeks "to vilify the veteran" and "to charge him with being a treasury raider" is the silliest kind of hysteria which has amused veterans who read the statements. All the average, sensible veteran wants is decent and effective care for veterans. He is the fellow who pays the bill for three Federal hospitals in one town where there have never been enough patients to fill even one of them. Mr. Craig well knows that in some cases VA hospitals have literally had to solicit business to justify their existence and that VA hospitals do not confine their ministrations to veterans.

What the veteran really needs—as a taxpayer—is protection from pressure groups like the American Legion.

Defeat For One Europe

By Andre Visson

British Stubbornness

THE DISCLOSURE by Paul G. Hoffman to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee of his "grave disappointment" with the Paris conference of the Marshall Plan countries may make it hard for him to defend the new ECA appropriations he is going to ask for. But being a man whose intellectual integrity is equaled only by his exceptional administrative ability, Mr. Hoffman did not consider it proper to conceal his disappointment from the Senators.

Were he not so frank, he could have made it more comfortable for himself by adopting an attitude of optimism, as offered by the annual report made public this week by the 18 Marshall Plan countries. This report enumerates all the achievements of the Marshall Plan and foresees a "manageable" situation for western Europe in 1952, when American aid ends.

But Mr. Hoffman knows the achievements of the Marshall Plan as well, if not better, than anyone else. He has announced them time and again on the Hill and in his talks to various groups in the country. He knows that American aid, under his administration, has brought about the remarkable recovery of European industry and agriculture. He knows that the four to five billion dollars a year put into the western European economy by ECA permitted an expansion in annual output to the amount of about 30 billion dollars.

He knows that western Europe, which in 1947 faced economic and financial catastrophe, with no less catastrophic social and political implications, in 1949 produced more goods and services than before the war. He knows that American economic aid has been one of the main factors in blocking Communist expansion in western Europe.

To be sure, he knows that American aid alone could not have achieved these remarkable results. He knows that if American aid came up to expectations, European self-help exceeded even the most optimistic hopes.

BUT HE also knows—and deeply deplores—that European mutual aid, which is the very basis of economic cooperation, has been sadly lacking in the first two years of the Marshall Plan. And he knows that unless a certain amount of economic cooperation is achieved during the remaining two years of the Marshall Plan, all the progress already made stands in danger of being wiped out.

Unfortunately, economic nationalism in western Europe is stronger today than it has ever been. Europeans talk about economic cooperation but wage economic warfare. Everyone is anxious to sell abroad as much as possible but buy as little as possible. Everyone is looking for foreign customers, while trying to keep foreign salesmen away from his door. European nations know that they cannot survive without an expanding trade.

Continental Europe appears to have realized the danger implicit in planned economy. France and Italy are now eager to free themselves from excessive state controls. They would like to move toward economic freedom, as represented by Switzerland and Belgium—Europe's most prosperous countries today.

But Britain, under her Labor government, stubbornly sticks to planned economy. And she sees in any extensive liberalization of international trade a threat to her socialistic experiment, as well as to her devalued but still inconvertible currency.

THIS EXPLAINS Mr. Hoffman's disappointment with the results of the Paris meeting of the Marshall Plan countries. His plans for the liberalization of European trade received a setback at Paris. No binding commitments were made to end the practice of "dual pricing"—selling a commodity badly needed abroad at a much higher price than it is sold for at home. And it was Britain's Chancellor of the Exchequer, Sir Stafford Cripps, who turned down the American proposal to create the post of "unifier" for the western European economy and to appoint Belgium's Paul-Henri Spaak to that position.

British officials are trying to minimize the incident. They pretend that the veto was for strictly personal reasons—an allegedly anti-British speech by Spaak at Philadelphia, and the desire to have a man who was a cabinet member in his country. But the truth is that the Labor government opposed Spaak even at the time he was Belgian Prime Minister. They opposed him because he was a representative of a country which is most unpopular in British Labor circles. They cannot forgive Belgium for having achieved prosperity by returning to a free economy. They are convinced that Belgium's prosperity, as well as that of the United States, is precarious and doomed to collapse.

They reject with sincere indignation all accusations of blocking Europe's economic unification. They feel that it is continental Europe that is blocking unification by adhering to the principle of free economy.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Senators Hear Denfeld Lowdown

By Drew Pearson

LAST FALL, when the battle of the admirals absorbed all Washington, it was said: "Wait until Congress gets back to town. Then the Navy will have its day."

Congress is now back in town, and not long ago the rebel wing of the Navy did have its day when Senators called modest Navy Secretary Matthews to defend his firing of Admiral Denfeld as Chief of Naval Operations. Confronted with Matthew's disarming frankness, however, the fireworks fizzled.

The closed-door session of the Armed Services Committee was meant for Senators' ears only.

But here is the inside story of the quiet testimony that finally squelched one of the most serious dissensions in the armed forces that the Nation has ever experienced.

Matthews, who is a dry-land lawyer from the Nebraska prairies, told the Senators that when he first became Secretary, Admiral William Blandy walked in and told him that he, Blandy, was to be the new Chief of Naval Operations. President Truman, Blandy said, had appointed Denfeld for two years only and it had been agreed that Blandy was to replace him.

Matthews decided then and there that he would have to run his own department or become a failure, and he recommended not Blandy, but Denfeld—for reappointment.

But almost immediately began a series of explosions that shook Matthews' confidence in Denfeld, made him realize his reappointment was a mistake. Although Denfeld denied having anything to do with the Captain Crommelin leaks, Matthews heard disquieting reports to the contrary. Then, after Admiral Bogan's confidential letter had mysteriously leaked to the press, Matthews discovered the most disturbing thing of all.

Denfeld not only had indorsed Bogan's rebellious letter, but he indorsed it in blank. In other words, he signed a sheet of paper and the Bogan statement was filled in afterward.

Matthews felt that this was deliberate double-dealing that had to be stopped immediately. Calling in Denfeld, he said:

"I am afraid your usefulness as Chief of Naval Operations has terminated."

Matthews told Senators that he took his decision to the President, who advised him not to be "too hasty." However, Matthews felt that the controversy was beyond patching up.

Traced to Subordinates

THE NAVY INSPECTOR GENERAL traced the leak of the Bogan letter to two junior officers serving under Vice Admiral John Price, then Deputy Chief of Naval Operations, Matthews disclosed.

On another occasion, Matthews held a secret conference with the top brass to discuss strategy for the B-36 hearing. Next morning the full story appeared in The Washington Post, under the by-line of John Norris.

"It was as if the reporter had taken notes under my desk," said Matthews.

He raised such a rumpus over this leak that a frightened captain confessed he had been ordered by Admiral Price to type up the minutes and turn them over to the admirals' propaganda unit, Operation 23.

Matthews seemed to feel that Price was not responsible for the leak, though Price also held out when the Secretary tried to delay the B-36 hearings. Matthews had talked all the top brass into going along with him until Price balked. Price insisted on talking it over first with Admiral Arthur Radford, spiritual leader of the Navy dissidents. In the end, Price, Radford and Gen. Clifton Cates, Commandant of the Marine Corps, decided to oppose their chief, the Navy Secretary.

South Dakota's Napoleon-sized Senator Chan Gurney, who had been chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee under the Republicans, admitted that Matthews' story sounded "reasonable."

"But," he added, "Congress must be sure of getting the full views of military men."

Matthews promptly agreed and promised never to punish an officer who testifies before Congress, "no matter how much his opinions differ from mine."

However, Senator Lester Hunt, the former Wyoming dentist, questioned this. He did not think an officer ought to testify before Congress if his opinions clashed with those of his superiors. Senator Leverett Saltonstall, the Massachusetts blueblood, insisted that Navy officers should not be gagged.

This aroused Oregon's forthright Senator Wayne Morse.

"I could never agree that an officer has the right to sabotage the policy of the Navy," he thundered. "You are going to have a pretty sad state of affairs if any officer can undermine Navy policy by stirring up a public controversy. This committee should not be a sanctuary to hide insubordination."

He cited a magazine article by Admiral Dan Gallery, criticizing Navy policy.

"It is outrageous that this man is still in Navy uniform," snorted Morse.

Matthews explained that Admiral Gallery had shown him the article a few days before publication in Colliers, that he (Matthews) had called it "contemptuous and disrespectful" and that Gallery had tried, but failed, to stop it from coming out.

Vote of Confidence

SENATOR LYNDON JOHNSON, the Texas Democrat who flies by helicopter, asked how Capt. Arleigh Burke, head of Operation 23, happened to be promoted to admiral.

Matthews explained that a Navy selection board reached to the bottom of a list of 200 eligibles, and hoisted Burke all the way to the top. For this reason he had called President Truman at Key West and urged him to drop Burke's name. The President did this but later changed his mind.

In the end, even the Republican firing squad agreed that Matthews was right, and tacitly gave him a vote of confidence.

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

Millie Played Ball

DEAR FRIENDS and Gentle Hearts:

Sometimes it is hard, when life gets tough, not to feel sorry for ourselves. Yet self-pity is as deadly as arsenic to peace of the heart. If we can only keep our souls clean of that poison, we can generally find a way out of trouble.

Like that time when our Miss Millie stopped crying.

Our Miss Millie was a frizzle-haired, frantic little bundle of girlhood, painfully immature; one of that ilk so often distrusted by children, a substitute school teacher. When our regular teacher fell ill, Miss Millie showed up in the fourth-grade room of our old school No. 39 in Baltimore—her very first assignment. Beholding her frightened face, 40-odd pupils in our class seemed to turn instantaneously into small demons. I cringe to report that "spitballs"—dipped in ink—began to bounce about the room.

"You're just Millie to us; we'll never 'Miss' you!" the little ones squealed. The poor lass stood helplessly before them, book poised to teach decimals. Then, sinking into her chair, she wailed: "You've got to listen to me! You've just got to!"—but the more she put her head in her arms and sobbed, the louder the children laughed. For youth is often thoughtless and sometimes cruel.

NOW MISS MILLIE knew she dared not call the principal for help in restoring order. Youngest substitute on the rolls, she would be taken off the list if the Superintendent of Public Schools felt she was not able to maintain discipline.

But in the very midst of her dilemma—she did need the job badly—Millie saw a sudden gleam of hope. Out of her childhood, there flashed into her mind a warning her father once had given her: "Don't ever whine when things go wrong, Millie. Find out at least what's wrong with you—then do something about that!"

The memory of his words, as she confided to us later, was like a douse of cold water. What was wrong with her? Dabbing at her eyes, Millie faced the unruly class again.

"I don't blame any of you," she began. "How could you respect a cry-baby teacher? Please forgive me and let's forget it ever happened. And we can all play ball together . . ."

When the principal, to whom the riot had meanwhile been reported by an alarmed janitor, strode downstairs to see for himself, he found Miss Millie's class utterly quiet, every child of us deeply attentive. What had wrought the change?

First, we respected the teacher's apology. Second, we were thunderstruck at her new method of teaching arithmetic; an idea born in her brain in the anxiety of her fear and helplessness. On one blackboard, the substitute teacher had chalked the names of eight American cities, each followed by dot marks and a row of three figures. On another board was a list of ball players, with dots and numbers after their names, too.

They were baseball batting averages and the standing of the clubs in the International League. Only in those days we called it the Eastern League.

By baseball percentages, Miss Millie, stalwart Orioles fan, was explaining the decimal system!

FROM that first victory, Millie went on to cultivate our fond affection. One schoolmaam, who had no pets, she, herself, became the pet of the class. When our regular teacher came back from the hospital, we all signed a futile petition to retain Miss Millie. And, though pennies were rare, we bought her a 75-cent box of chocolates and carried the gift by night to her home.

By conquering herself, Miss Millie had won the whole good-for-nothing lot of us!

Senor Fito Brings in a Real Gusher

MEXICO CITY (ONA). — Twelve years ago the Mexican government expropriated all domestic—and foreign-owned oil properties here. It has taken all that time to pay indemnities to the original owners; and one Fito Peralta a few weeks ago received from the Finance Ministry a check for seven million pesos (about $700,000) for his land.

With part of this incomputable fortune, the bewildered Fito, an illiterate Indian, has just built himself an elaborate home at Acapulco, the fabulous Pacific-side resort well known to American tourists, and in his elaborate patio he has installed a decorative fountain. The fountain gives forth 24 hours a day with imported champagne, which Fito's guests collect in midair with silver goblets.

Matter of Fact

GOP Curtsies Provoke a Revolt

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

THE ATTEMPT to write a "Republican statement of principles" has now run its expected course. A rather vacuous document has been unveiled, and it contains just enough bows in the direction of the big contributors, which it was designed to placate, to drive such progressive Republicans as Senators Cabot Lodge and Irving Ives into open rebellion.

In the congressional committee which drafted the statement, Lodge repeatedly and futilely pointed out that the civil rights clause, which carefully avoided specific mention of FEPC, had a distinctly weasel-worded smell. He warned that it would be taken as a repudiation of the 1948 Republican platform, and that if it were not altered he would disown the statement.

Nevertheless, Senator Robert A. Taft stood firm against Lodge, and such other members of the congressional drafting committee as Senators Kenneth Wherry and Owen Brewster, and Representatives Joseph Martin and Charles Halleck back Taft. Lodge was thus beaten in his plea for a forthright stand on civil rights.

Taft Supporters Desert

IN THE SENATORIAL conference which was convened to consider the statement, Ives and a number of others joined Lodge in revolt. Ives again proposed that the 1948 civil rights plank be reaffirmed. In a show of hands, he was backed, significantly, not only by such of the 12 Senatorial "young Turks" as were present, but with Martin of Pennsylvania, Ferguson of Michigan and others who usually support Taft. Nevertheless, Taft again won the day

The meaning of all this is clear. There is no doubt that Taft and others are sincerely convinced that compulsory fair employment legislation is bad legislation.

But the basic reason for the weasel-wordedness of the civil rights statement is simply that many big Northern industrialists are just as bitterly opposed to FEPC as any Southerner. Men of the Wherry-Martin-Brewster-Halleck stripe are peculiarly responsive to the opinions of big industrialists. And thus a magnificent opportunity to put the Democrats on the spot by all-out Republican support for civil rights was lost.

The anti-Lodge majority found a valuable ally in Novelist Clarence Buddington Kelland, who was selected by the Republican National Committee to give literary polish to the Congressional draft.

Kelland is adept at translating into purple prose all those prejudices and policies which have been chiefly responsible for the long record of Republican defeat. His efforts were, naturally, well received by the Wherry-Brewster-Halleck-Martin contingent, but Lodge succeeded in toning down some of Kelland's more extreme effusions, particularly as concerned labor and the tariff, where too flourishing a nostalgia for the dead past was in evidence.

A Tested War Cry

BUT ON THE WHOLE Lodge fought a losing battle. One losing battle, which he fought with Taft, is worth describing. Taft produced the slogan, "Liberty against Socialism," now to become the Republican war cry. Wherry, Martin & Co. enthusiastically congratulated Taft on his brainchild. Lodge entered a lone dissent.

Taft, with something of the pride of authorship, pointed out that he had been campaigning intensively in Ohio for several months, that he had used this line with marked success, and that he knew what he was talking about. Lodge replied that he did not doubt that the slogan would appeal to voters who were Republicans already, but that to get the marginal vote which the Republicans must have to win, some more convincing and less shopworn appeal was essential.

This is, in fact, what the contest in the Republican Party is all about. Most of the Republican leaders are apparently determined to limit Republican efforts to soothing the big contributors and to persuading the already persuaded among the voters. The "young Turks" in the Senate and elsewhere, led by Lodge and Ives, are convinced that if the Republican Party is ever to win, the persuadable margin of the unpersuaded, who have been voting Democratic for the last 16 years, must also be brought over.

Whether the "statement of principles" will succeed in its principle object—filling Republican coffers—remains to be seen. But it may serve a more useful purpose in the end. Senator Ives is seriously considering issuing a sort of declaration of independence, with special emphasis on civil rights and amendment of the Taft-Hartley Act, in which he may be joined by upward of a dozen Senators. Thus the central issue within the Republican Party, between acceptance of the present and a hankering for the past, may be at last clearly defined.

Looking at the South

A Good Boy, Knows His Place

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, MISS. — This Negro is what they call a good boy and he lives in my town (and a thousand towns in the South), and the only thing he ever did that was sort of serious was to blow the head off a victim whom the papers usually describe as "another of his race!" Or maybe it was his common law wife whose throat he slashed from ear to ear, I forget.

Anyway, he is a good boy and knows his place and his mother used to cook for the Deepwaters, and he played with Bill Deepwater when they were kids together. A white man's nigger, and a steady boy. Works hard down at the City Garage. Don't recall what he shot this other boy over. A high brown, most probably. That's what usually at the bottom of it.

Had to try him, of course. Can't let them go about killing each other right and left without doing something. He had a good lawyer. One of the Jones twins he used to play with. Ed Jones never would let a good nigger down. Understand he took the case for almost nothing. Smart lawyer, too.

Fair Enough

WELL, THE DOCKET was heavy, and the D. A. and the defense got together on a little trading. Settled on a guilty of manslaughter plea with a five-year sentence. Fair enough trade. He'll be out and working at the garage again in two or three years, what with good behavior and the parole system.

So don't tell me a good boy isn't treated right fine down here. Why, you know what the sheriff did, long before the trial? He just put this boy on his honor, so to speak, because he knew he could trust him. Used him mostly around his own house, the sheriff did, cleaning up and doing a little cooking and chauffering. Generally locked him up at night, but not always.

Wasn't any use. He was a good boy. Never saw a boy with so many white folks ready to say a good word for him. Lot of people didn't think he ought to have got five years, nice and pleasant as he was. He never had been in any real trouble before.

Tough Break

THAT'S about all there is to the story except what happened the week after the trial, just before the long chain man was coming to take the new convicts off to the penal farm. This boy had a lot of friends to bid goodbye to, and a girl or two maybe, and, some backbiters say, a score to settle. So they didn't lock him up those last few nights, and in a way it was a sort of tough break for this boy.

Seems like he got a few drinks in him and decided to get even with another member of his race. Way I heard it, she was the woman that was at the bottom of the shooting. So he came round to her shack and tried to break in and this fool girl got to screaming. He got scared, naturally, and ran before the town police got there. This boy lost his head for sure when he saw the police. Didn't even have sense enough to run back to the sheriff's house. And he didn't turn up at the county jail that night or the next day.

Kind of put the sheriff on the spot a day or so the story leaked out. Some people thought he was stretching things a little to let this boy out of jail after he'd been convicted. Never could see it that way myself. It was just a 5-year sentence for a plain ordinary killing.

And everything turned out all right in the end. Early on the day the long chain man came, the town police picked the boy up and turned him over to the sheriff just in time. That boy's off at the penal farm now and everything's wound up.

I almost forgot a sort of sidelight that puts a bad taste in the mouths of decent folks down here. Seems like a handful of uppity Negroes—the kind with education—called on the sheriff and the newspaper and practically demanded, if you can imagine it, that Negro lawmakers be prosecuted to the full extent of the law, just as if they were white people. Understand they went on to say that decent law-abiding Negroes were getting aroused about the way Negro lawbreaking and killings were treated like jokes. Yes sir, aroused was the word they used.

Don't tell me that agitators haven't been busy down here when that kind of talk goes on.

Our Political Economy

Rent Controls Distort Housing

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

THIS is our eighth year of rent control. President Truman thinks ceilings should be kept on for at least another year "to prevent widespread hardships and sharp curtailment of the buying power of millions of consumers."

But we have been at peace for nearly five years, and landlords feel they are the victims of unjust discrimination. With controls coming up for renewal June 30, pressure is strong on Congress to let them die.

What has it meant to have some rents held down while other rents and prices were free to rise? If controls should end this year, what would happen to rents and to residential building?

Since February 1, 1947, we have had a two-price system for rents. All units coming into the market since then have been uncontrolled; most of the older units have continued under rent controls except where local authorities voted to lift them.

By decontrolling new units, Congress hoped to encourage building. That objective was attained. We started 849,000 units in 1947, 931,300 in 1948, and 1949 set an all-time record for construction with the undertaking of more than a million housing units.

Most of the new homes were for sale, not for rent. What new apartments there were brought rents from 50 to 100 percent above the controlled levels. While families with controlled rents sat tight, those who were apartment-hunting in these last three years were channeled into a highly restricted market.

The pressure of demand was concentrated in a limited area of new or converted units. This bid up rents to a level far beyond the control ceilings. A 1948 survey by the Housing Expediter in 700 cities showed that the average monthly rent for 41,205 new units was $109.38.

There have been, in short, two unrelated rent levels in this country, separated by a wide gap. Most of us have had a cost-of-living subsidy from our landlords; the rest have paid higher rents than we would have paid under a free price system.

Dwellings Followed

WHILE new apartments brought high rents, new houses brought high prices. This was inevitable, for in this narrow decontroled market, inflated housing prices have been a mirror of inflated rentals.

A desperate young family, house-hunting in 1947 or 1948, had Hobson's choice. Should they rent a one-bedroom apartment for $80? Or would they prefer to buy a row house, pledging themselves to pay $75 a month in interest, principal, insurance and taxes for the next 25 years?

Had all rentals been decontrolled, you would not have had the gulf between ceiling rents on the one hand, and free rents and prices on the other. A balance would have been struck somewhere in between, neither so low as the first, nor so high as the second.

This distortion has discriminated quite arbitarily among families. This is unjust, of course. But it has had another, more important effect on the whole construction industry.

By setting a premium, and a high one, on all new homes and apartments, it encouraged building costs to get far out of line. Builders bid up the cost of scarce labor and materials with all the abandon of a tight seller's market. It is easy to get costs up there, but hard to get them down. For the future, this may have serious consequences.

A New Market

WHAT will happen when controls go off? Those rents which have been controlled will rise. The others will fall. The premium market will disappear.

Let us now return to that desperate young family which was paying $80 a month for a one-bedroom apartment. At that rental they might easily have preferred to buy a new home which would cost them $75 a month.

But their rent now, instead of being $80, might drop to $70. This means that if they were to be attracted into buying the price of homes would have to come down, too.

When rent controls go off, the entire building industry will have to make a drastic downward revision. Decontrol will create a great potential new market for homes, because it will raise so many rents. But it will be a demand for much cheaper houses than any on the market now. The critical point at which people will buy instead of rent will be lower than today's prices.

Builders will have to cut costs and lower profit margins if they want to tap this market. If they succeed, our housing boom could last for years. If they fail, it will pop like a beautiful toy balloon, carrying with it most of our hopes for continued prosperity.

This shall endure!
Not even when Time and the elements have reduced the mountains to leveled dust, will the appreciation of Abraham Lincoln be erased from the hearts of Americans.
In his days, few knew him as great. As the years pass, and the generations come and go, Lincoln's stature swells to a majestic, love-inspiring "rock in a weary land" in whose shade we can shelter our heartfelt hopes for a greater and still free America.
With a world disturbed by conflicting ideas, the simple belief in man as an individual against any other ideology grows more vital to the maintenance of Americ a's—Lincoln's—way of living.
May none of us ever lose faith in his words and his work.

BOOKS

The Magazine Rack

By Katharine Graham

THE REPORTER would have been in a happier position if its editors had chosen a less comprehensive title than "The U. S. Press in Action." Under this high sounding theme appears a story by Richard Lewis on how stark is life in the city room, "The Times—One Man's Poison" (Dwight MacDonald's), Harold Hinton on columnists, Fred Hechinger's comparison of Life editorials since they started, "Scoreboard in the Sky" and yet another analysis of why the Sun failed, called, guess what, "The Sun Goes Down." All this is interesting, but to lump it together and call it the United States press in action seems silly.

MacDonald's thesis is that the New York Times is a great gatherer but a poor disseminator of news; that it is poorly edited or not edited. "Why," he asks, "should the reader do all the work on the Times?" New York Timesman Hinton writes on the guerilla war between the press, more especially the columnists, and the Government. Hinton's references to the Georgetown entertaining of Columnists Pearson and Alsop are as thinly veiled as Salome but for some odd reason remain politely anonymous.

LIFE reports on topic A that ironically it was Ingrid Bergman's rival, "Italian actress Anna Magnani who saved the hospital from immediate storming by the Rome press" the night she arrived. Most of the city's newsmen were viewing the special premiere of Anna's movie, "Volcano."

John Kobler's "closeup," called "Tempest-on-the-Tiber," is, let's face it, fascinating. Anna Magnani was the recipient of Director Roberto Rossellini's affections before Ingrid arrived. She is 41, untouched by makeup artist and hairdresser alike, with neither the face nor the figure of a Hollywood queen, raucous and tempestuous, but she is the greatest actress in Italy and, the Italians think, in the world. "Volcano" was "deliberately calculated to invite comparison" with "Stromboli," and was filmed on a neighboring island at the same time.

A five-page story on the Barkleys says they have "become the Capitol's No. 1 guests." Life pictures the famous couple at some of their parties and on one of the three evenings they have so far spent at home—apparently in the company of a Life photographer. Mrs. Barkley is photographed doing the dishes on the maid's night out, which you'd think might not have coincided with one of their three at home.

THE NEW YORKER'S letter from Washington calls attention to the closing next week of the Corcoran Gallery's "highly successful exhibition of originals of Herblock's editorial cartoons for The Washington Post." NEWSWEEK'S press section contains the success story of Street and Smith's "Living," for young homemakers. Living grew out of a section in Mademoiselle, the fashion magazine for a slightly younger group. With this issue, Living has become a monthly, priced since last November at 35 cents and with a circulation of 300,000. The price has gone down, the circulation up. Editors talk about a prospective million.

OTHER house and garden features now on the newsstands are: House Beautiful's issue, "How to Better Your Living Right Where You Are." Here is advice from such authorities as Clifton Fadiman ("Reading for Delight"), Emily Genauer's "It Doesn't Have to be a Masterpiece" (how to buy pictures by the Herald Tribune's art critic), John Crosby on television and what it might do to our lives, and Emily Kimbrough's plea that club life be brought nearer the home.

In the American Home, Ida M. Andrews tells how she retired only to start working on the things she really enjoys and never had time for. She redecorated a tiny house, doing most of the work herself. Another build-it-yourself gives plans for a practical summer camp. The mother of a 6-year-old advises on giving an inexpensive children's birthday party.

There is no excuse for an ugly house, proclaims House and Garden. Yet many are being put up every day. It shows four carefully planned houses, each one full of adaptable ideas.

In Better Homes and Gardens, the decorating section shows a kitchen fit to live in, little changes in a home that make a big difference. There's a February garden guide and 12 common planting mistakes; how to landscape your grounds (flowers tucked among rocks if you have them), and a vacation trip in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

PATHFINDER reports on what it says is a secret experiment being conducted in New York's elementary schools. Philosophy behind the experiment is that Junior shouldn't be burdened with learning numbers in kindergarten and the first and second grades. Children learn better, instructs a secret document circulated to the schools, from situations. For instance, in the second grade the little dears are supposed to work up to bringing in apples and making applesauce. Laura K. Eads, a psychologist in the curriculum department of the New York schools, authored the plan, which is bound to meet with opposition, according to Pathfinder.

A MOST amusing as well as timely Harper's piece, in view of the recent holdups, is "The Heist," by Everett De Baun. The author should know whereof he speaks. Before his arrest, he was a specialist in the field. He writes from an Eastern State penitentiary, so maybe he wasn't expert enough.

Success of a holdup, or "heist," depends on careful planning and preparation. The heist itself often lasts as little as half a minute. Robbers are never melodramatic as in the movies, never rude if they can help it. Wild brandishing of pistols or shouting of orders is frowned upon, because "fear has made more heroes than courage ever has." One imponderable for which "heist-men" are always on the lookout is women. Nobody can ever tell how they will react, says De Baun.

OF LOCAL interest is Sidney Shalett's Saturday Evening Post piece on the Carlton, "Washington's Flossiest Hotel." Built in 1926 by the late Harry Wardman, the Carlton was frankly designed for snob-appeal. It had only 250 rooms and a phone in every bathroom. It snobbed itself right into bankruptcy, relates Shalett. Reorganized along different lines, the Carlton retained its individuality, is now the gathering ground for royalty, Presidents and John L. Lewis.

In Collier's, Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, former chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, tells why he broke with the President. Walter Davenport reveals the real boss of the National Press Club. She is Mrs. Mae Howland Smith, the club's office manager, financial conscience and silent arbiter.

Gen. Lucius D. Clay . . . "It is just like him to be sure of himself and to assume that he knew best"

General Always Came Out Fighting

Clay's Honesty Reveals Defects

By Ferdinand Kuhn

DECISION IN GERMANY. By Lucius D. Clay. 522 pp. and index. Doubleday. $4.50.

GENERAL CLAY is a brave man to call his book "Decision in Germany." What decision? Decisiveness there was, and driving energy and firm resolve, during the General's four years as American military governor.

But if anyone thinks there was decision, let him look at the map of divided Germany, let him talk with leading Germans in their own surroundings, and let him read the speech made in Stuttgart last week by the general's successor, John J. McCloy. In spite of the general's confident title, Germany is still the great question mark of Europe, and its future may take not 4 years but 40 to decide.

It is just like General Clay to be sure of himself and to assume that he knew best. He now writes that if "the so-called German mind" did exist, he never found it; "German minds seemed to us to be remarkably like those elsewhere." Would someone please page the French and Belgians, the Dutch and Czechs and Poles, who have known the German mind for centuries and who would have a different tale to tell?

But, in another way, it is a good thing that General Clay had such self-assurance among his many sterling qualities. Without it he would never have dared to grapple as he did with the appalling problems of postwar Germany. Looking back, he thinks he would have felt the task hopeless if he had realized the "confusion and chaos" ahead of him.

It took someone with Clay's optimism even to hope for the transformation that has taken place by now. Conditions in Western Germany today, good and bad, are to some extent a monument to the fierce will power and to the competent and hard-driving administration of this American soldier.

But there was another side to Clay's character and to the record he made, and this book reflects it more clearly than most political apologia. For the general has written a book so honest that it does not hide his own defects of mind and judgment.

General Marshall used to say that whenever there was a meeting in wartime with Clay present, there was a fight. Certainly Clay's four years in Germany were an unending fight—not just with the Russians, with whom he started on terms of good will and trust, but with his allies, especially the French, and with his superiors in the War Department and the State Department as well.

Didn't Even Consult

HE DIDN'T like the stern directive under which he first operated in Germany, and he made no bones about it. He comforted himself with the thought that this was a generalized "guidance" which he could interpret and shape pretty much as he chose. He didn't even bother to consult the State Department before he went to Germany.

"As I look back," he writes, "I find it amazing that I did not visit the State Department or talk with any of its officials. Nor was it suggested that I do so. No one at the time advised me of the role of the State Department in occupation matters, or of its relationship to military government, and I am inclined to believe no one had thought it out."

Clearly, Clay had not thought it out. He now professes that he fully understood and recognized the State Department's function as the formulator of political policy abroad. As evidence, he says that his State Department adviser, Robert D. Murphy, never dissented from a single one of his decisions during all the four years. The statement tells less about Clay's relationship with the State Department than about the kind of job Murphy did.

By and large, Clay was an independent proconsul, a kind of MacArthur in Germany, who never hesitated to fight back against policies or instructions he disliked. The civilian agencies were frankly afraid of him—afraid, as one high State Department official once confessed, that if they picked a quarrel with Clay he would resign. And then who on earth could be found to take his place?

Conscious of Purse Strings

IF CLAY felt he had any master during his four years it was not the civilian agencies, nor even his own Department of Defense, but the Appropriations Committees of Congress, especially of the House. No servant of his country every kept the Appropriations Committees so constantly, so religiously, in his mind as General Clay.

"To obtain funds to support the occupation," he writes, "certain commitments were made to the Appropriations Committees, and sometimes these commitments did not fit in with the ways in which the State Department would have liked the funds used to support foreign policy."

So it was that Clay refused to let Belgian and Dutch ports be used to transport supplies to and from Germany. It would have cost dollars out of his appropriation.

So it was, too, that he raised a fearful outcry about western Germany's first allocation of funds under the Marshall Plan. He threatened to go straight to Congress—in this case, to Representative John Taber, then chairman of the House Committee—if he did not get more money. He says now that "our stand had been taken with the knowledge and approval of our Government," although for weeks afterward, whenever Clay's attitude was mentioned, Averell Harriman in Paris would turn white with anger.

Clay had his mind solely on Germany. His goal was to make Western Germany self-supporting and get it off the back of the taxpayer as quickly as possible. He either forgot or ignored the fact that other Marshall Plan countries were on the back of the taxpayer, too, and that it was at least as important for the United States to help the former allies as the former enemies.

YET, for all the fights he started and all the official headaches he caused, the general's book is sober and generally factual, without artificial coloring or flavoring.

He had a tedious job in governing postwar Germany, especially when it meant getting agreement from allies at every stage of the journey. His book is a picture of the wasteland he had to travel. Long stretches of it are as painstaking as a doctoral thesis, and sometimes almost as dull.

And yet, as one reads of the patient rebuilding of German life, of the day-to-day administrative problems that seemed insoluble, of the obstructions that would have driven most men mad, one gets the sense of achievement that Clay himself must have felt as he saw some of his hopes come true.

His story becomes stirring and tragic when it tells of his dealings with the Russians—first in the vodka-and-caviar period that followed the surrender, then in the long months of frustration in the Allied Control Council, and finally in the climax of the Berlin blockade.

Clay says he was the first to propose the merger of the British and American zones in Germany; he did it in a message to Washington in May, 1946. He also says that in November, 1947, just after the breakup of the Council of Foreign Ministers meeting in London, he and the British military governor, Gen. Sir Brian Robertson, first "asked for authority to give political character to the bizonal administrative structure without giving it the name of government."

This was the germ of the fateful decision a few months later to set up a real western German government—a decision which the Russians then used as one of the excuses for the Berlin blockade. But by then, Clay feels, the Russians had already given unmistakable signs of ill will in the insults and invective with which Foreign Minister Molotov had caused the breakup of the London meeting.

One Idea Overruled

IN MARCH, 1948, Clay rang an alarm bell in a message to General Bradley. He had no proof, but he was sure trouble was brewing, and he no longer ruled out the possibility of war. Army Secretary Royall and some of his advisers were nervous, but Clay insisted that risks had to be taken. If not, he warned, Soviet power would engulf all Germany and all of western Europe.

He proposed the airlift and got it. He got more planes and still more. He did not always have his way; on July 10, 1948, he proposed sending an armed convoy through the Russian zone to Berlin, and he still thinks he was right, although Washington overruled him.

In September, when the Berlin crisis had been laid before the United Nations, some officials were still nervous when they met with Clay and Secretary Marshall in Paris. Ambassador Lewis W. Douglas thought Berlin should be held "up to the point of war," but felt that war must be avoided at all costs because a Soviet holocaust would destroy the remaining liberal thought in Europe.

Ambassador Bedell Smith, fresh from Moscow, agreed that Berlin should be held temporarily, but "was inclined to believe that it was a liability to be disposed of at the first auspicious moment."

But Clay was resolute, and he had the satisfaction of seeing the doubters proved wrong. His tribute to the men of the airlift, and to the people of Berlin, is amply deserved.

What He Would Like

CLAY is now in private life; our affairs in Germany are in other hands, and it does not matter greatly what he would like done in the future. He stresses the need of bringing Germany back into the family of nations. He hints, very guardedly and in the form of questions, that he would like to see Germany get a permanent military guarantee when the occupation ends, and wants Germany to "contribute to the common security"—presumably by armed forces under the North Atlantic Treaty. It is at least a clue to what we might see developing if Clay were still in office.

This book, so fair, so straightforward, so generous to others, and yet so false in much of its reasoning, will be a gold mine to those who will some day write the history of this postwar—or is it to be prewar?—period. Yet one fact should be remembered to Clay's detriment.

He left Germany in May, 1949. His book, with its account of secret conferences, its quotations of what others said to him behind closed doors, appears in February, 1950. No doubt it would have appeared earlier, in time for the Christmas rush, if he had not worked so hard on the proofs and if his publishers had not turned out such a handsome volume.

General Clay thus follows the practice set by his friend and hero, Secretary Byrnes, and by Ambassador Bedell Smith, of hurrying into print just about nine months after he laid down his commission from the President of the United States.

Foreign governments, look around you. Somewhere at this moment, engaging in confidential dealings with you, is an American ambasador, general or politician who will resign and tell the whole story to the world before the year is out. When will we wake up and see that this kind of thing weakens our diplomacy and tears down the trust that ought to be our greatest asset?

Poor, But Not Helpless

Puerto Rico Blueprints 'Operation Bootstrap'

By Louis Brownlow

Mr. Brownlow is a recognized authority on public administration.

PUERTO RICO'S ECONOMIC FUTURE. By Harvey S. Perloff. 435 pp. University of Chicago. $4.75.

THE problem of Puerto Rico is not an easy one to solve. It is not even an easy one to state.

Here on an island 1000 miles east of Florida, an island only 100 miles long and 30 miles wide, live more than 2 million citizens of the United States in the most densely populated area in the Western Hemisphere—more than 600 persons to the square mile. Their standard of living is low. Their natural resources, aside from the soil and the climate of perennial spring, are meager.

Nearly half of the families have an income of less than $500 a year, and the families themselves are big. The Puerto Rican birth rate is the highest in the world. The Puerto Rican death rate is lower than that in all save three or four countries of the world. The economy is overwhelmingly agricultural. Industrial development has been slow. Puerto Rico is poor.

All of these things are set out with great clarity and circumspection by Dr. Harvey S. Perloff, of the Institute of Planning of the University of Chicago. It is significant, however, that Dr. Perloff has given the volume a subtitle, "A Study in Planned Development." That such a study could be made and could be issued in such a thoughtful work as this is of itself proof that, although Puerto Rico may be poor, it is neither hopeless nor helpless.

Education Basic

TRUE, the standard of living is low. But although this island is much more crowded than any other in the Caribbean, its standard of living is higher than that of any of the other islands, including the Cuban, Haitian and Dominican Republics as well as the remaining European colonial possessions. At the base of its essential plan for its self-improvement, Puerto Rico puts education, and it spends more on education than any republic or colony in the Caribbean area.

Ruled for 400 years by a Governor appointed in Madrid and for 50 years by a Governor appointed in Washington, Puerto Rico is now completing its first year under the administration of a Governor elected by its own people. It was in preparation for that outstanding political event that the University of Puerto Rico asked Dr. Perloff to undertake the two-year survey, the results of which appear in this book.

His method was to use the remarkable statistical and informational facilities of the University of Puerto Rico and the Puerto Rican government as the basis for his writing; then to distribute drafts of his chapters to all of the leading government officials, economists, political scientists and educators; then to rewrite as a result of their comment; then to assemble some 40 or 50 of these leaders under the chairmanship of the Governor for a discussion of his text; and then finally to write what here is printed. (Incidentally, although the fact is not noted in this book, the Governor gave a name to those sessions with Dr. Perloff—"The Parliament of Man.")

Essentially, though not textually, the study is divided into three principal parts. First, there is agriculture, by which most of the people live, but in which area higher productivity is possible and is being planned for. Second, there is industry, of which there is all too little, but which the government is determined to to develop and encourage. Third, there is the biggest problem of all—population.

Here, at any rate, there is no lack of productivity. Emigration has helped, but has not solved the problem. Birth control techniques, Dr. Perloff thinks, cannot be relied upon for a solution. He makes it plain that there is no simple answer to the question of how to support too many people on too little land.

The new Governor, Luis Munoz Marin, has said that Puerto Rico has abandoned Operation Lament in favor of Operation Bootstrap. Dr. Perloff faces up squarely to the difficulties that beset the Puerto Rican plans for the improvement of the island's economic future. But he does not despair.

Not only for those who are interested in the peculiar problems of Puerto Rico, but for anyone who is interested in how to plan for greater productivity, for a higher standard of living and for higher attainment in popular education, and how to make such a plan with eyes wide open to the hard facts that set up so many hurdles as the course is run toward the realization of rosy dreams, the reading of this book will be a rewarding experience.

The Coffin Corner . . .

SECRETS OF THE SURETE: The Memoirs of Commissioner Jean Belin, Master Detective of France. Putnam. $3.50.

M. BELIN is distressingly honest. "Detection in France," he says near the beginning of this story of 30 years in the French national police, "is largely based on the full use of informers." And he nails down that point again and again in as dull a job of police reporting as ever came off a precinct teletype. But his methodical recital has that virtue of honesty, and will come as a dash of cold water to aficionados of French and English mystery fiction. Belin obviously is telling the truth about the prosecution of Landru, the Bluebeard (they really didn't have much on the man); about the opera-comique sieges of one or two trapped anarchists by hundreds of police and troops; about the Stavisky scandal (the swindler ran his course, and committed suicide more because he was broke than because the police were after him.) But the last half of Belin's book is rewarding reading as current history. It begins with the rise of the Cagoulards, the hooded gang which Belin says paved the way for the fall of France and collaboration. He believes this French Ku Klux Klan was financed by Hitler and Mussolini, and that if the Surete's prosecution of the chief Cagoulards had not been halted by the outbreak of war, "Laval, Petain and several others might have been discredited before they had a chance to do the manifold harm they did." Belin certainly proves one point, from the peculiar vantage point of France: A police force is effective in inverse ratio to its involvement in politics.

In a Nutshell

THE BLACK HORSE COMPANY. By Iris Vinton. Dodd, Mead. 273 pp. $2.50.

BESIDES Ebony, for whom the book is named, there is young Jonathan and a goodly company of youngsters living on the south shore of Long Island a century ago. When they find and make seaworthy an old schooner buried in the sands, their adventures really begin: They sail to find a fishing fleet lost in the fog, rescue shipwrecked immigrant children and are led home through the fog by the swimming horse. A book for older boys and girls by Iris Vinton, director of publications service for the Boys Club of America.

CANON CHARLES KINGSLEY. By Una Pope-Hennessy. Macmillian. 294 pp. Ill. $3.

CHARLES KINGSLEY, the clergyman who tutored the then Prince of Wales, wrote "Westward Ho!" and "The Water Babies" and goaded Cardinal Newman into writing the famous "Apologia pro Vita sua," becomes a most interesting figure in this able biography by Dame Una Pope-Hennessy. A feature of the biography, which has been very well received in England, is the reproduction of several drawings by Canon Kingsley.

THE FIRST ONE HUNDRED YEARS OF YANKEE CALIFORNIA. By Carl I. Wheat. Available from Superintendent of Documents, Washington. 23 pp. Frontispiece. $1.

THE Library of Congress has caused to be printed the sprightly address given by Carl I. Wheat, noted student of California history, at the opening November 12 of the library's exhibit commemorating the State's centennial. The book is an attractive example of Government Printing Office design and printing.

ONCE UPON A SUMMER. By Natalie Shipman. Avalon Books: Bouregy & Curl. 5254 pp. $2.

YOUNG Dan Collier fell in love with Christina Edgren, but the war intervened. When Dan, now married to a difficult woman, returned with her to the New England village, he found that Christina had also married. Old emotions, however, still tug in this light novel. A shortened version of "Once Upon a Summer" appeared in Redbook.

The Man Is Missing From New 'Pasteur'

By N. S. Haseltine

LOUIS PASTEUR. By Rene J. Dubos. Little, Brown. 418 pp. $5.

RENE J. DUBOS, bacteriologist and pathologist, has all the necessary ingredients for an exciting biography in this, his third book. Unfortunately, he handles them too much like a pathologist, and too little like a biographer.

The author, whether in explanation or defense, uses Pasteur's life "as a vehicle for the study of the mechanisms and motivations of scientific life," it says on the jacket. In that he may have succeeded for those readers with microscopes and tissue slicers.

Disappointing

IT ALL seems such a waste of good material to the average reader, the reader who expects to find an orderly account of the life, the habits, the triumphs, the despairs and the love or loves of an individual.

Then, too, the life of the scientist is a fertile field for entertaining, gripping writing—such as Morton Thompson's life of Dr. Semelweis in "The Cry and the Covenant." Scientists live just as exciting lives as explorers in uncharted lands, and almost all are "characters," yet few are the biographers who do them justice.

Louis Pasteur was no exception. He lived a fruitful 72 years before his death in 1895. His name, as the author states, "evokes not only the memory of a great scientist but also that of a crusader who devoted his life to the welfare of man."

He was a world figure in science, a man whose name as now used in "pasteurization" connotes healthful food and beverages. Few lives have been more fully recorded than that of Louis Pasteur, and Dr. Dubos, with all that material available, chose to write a book with a purpose.

Essentially an Expose

DR. DUBOS chose to dissect Pasteur into his scientific contributions to studies on (1) the origin of life; (2) the chemical basis of life; (3) the relations of microorganisms to man; (4) the germ theory, and (5) the policy of public hygiene.

In that dissecting, he exposed rather than told of such exciting achievements as Pasteur's isolation of the cause of anthrax, the sheep-killing disease; the discovery of the organism of rabies, and a vaccine to save human beings from fatal, foaming madness.

He bared, too, Pasteur's work in saving his country's (France's) silkmaking industry when disease attacked its silkworms, and his contributions to wine and beer making.

These ingredients are all there, with more, in this newest book on Louis Pasteur. But the man, himself, is missing in the theme of "mechanisms and motivations of scientific life."

The Theosophical teachings deal with the Universe as a whole, and with man as an offspring and an integral part thereof. Intelligently Arranged Encyclopedia

The 'Quotable' Lincoln, From A to Z

THE LINCOLN ENCYCLOPEDIA. Compiled and edited by Archer H. Shaw. MacMillan. 392 pp. $6.50.

WE SOMETIMES forget: That A. Lincoln wrote more words than W. Shakespeare.

That he drew more books from the Library of Congress than any President before or since.

That the almost Biblical beauty of his language at its best was not confined to single masterpieces such as the Gettysburg Address, but appears (sporadically) in ever-increasing measure in his spoken and written works from the mid-1840s onward.

That the gangling frontiersman whose father could barely scrawl his name was not only one of the best-read men who ever held the Presidency but was evolving during his final years into one of the greatest stylists America has ever produced.

That his prose rhythms influenced the literary mood and mode of Sandburg, Sherwood and F. D. R. (as Gibbons and Shakespeare affected the prose style of Winston Churchill).

And, finally, that, as David C. Mearns says in the introduction to this encyclopedia, he is perhaps "the most quotable notable in history."

Nation's Scriptures

MR. MEARNS, assistant librarian of the Library of Congress, is exaggerating only slightly when he says that Lincoln's writings "constitute the American scriptures, the testaments of democracy, the trademarks of tradition, the prescriptions of the patriots. No state paper, no pious or outraged editorial, no schoolboy's essay, no dizzy flight of oratory, can be accepted as quite authentic unless it glows with some proudly borrowed Lincolnism."

But, like every writer who has extended himself toward the million-word mark, Lincoln can be quoted for or against almost any important issue.

Both Emerson and H. L. Mencken have pontificated that consistency is "a small man's virtue." By this definition, Lincoln was not a small man.

He can be quoted for and against liquor, for and against emancipation of the slaves, for and against racial equality, for and against the sanctity of the courts.

But his stands upon these questions can be dated. And, unlike Emerson, for instance, he was never the victim of a transcendental whim. He grew consistently toward ever greater understanding of his fellow men, ever deepening love for humanity.

As Sandburg has shown in his four-volume "Lincoln. The War Years," the rather crude frontier lawyer and politician was refined in the incandescent inferno of the Civil War into a great, compassionate human being. The last dross in the raw ore had been eliminated by the time Booth turned his 8-ounce brass derringer toward the presidential box at one of the most tragic moments in American history.

A Bit Disturbing

THIS lovingly edited, intelligently arranged Lincoln Encyclopedia will probably increase the Lincolnisms in current oratory, since at a moment's notice any hack politico can now discover what Lincoln said applicable to the subject at hand.

No longer will the entire staff of the Library of Congress be kept at work until 3 in the morning helping the Chief Executive find the desired Lincoln quotation. From A to Z—here it is.

Although almost every conscientious Lincoln biographer has apprised us of the fact, it is still a trifle disturbing to discover how often during the 1850s the "antislavery" candidate professed his unwillingness to interfere with the rights of Southerners to keep slaves; how reluctantly he issued the Emancipation Proclamation in 1863 as a "military measure."

Even more disturbing are his continuous assurances that Negroes could never be the social and political equals of white men. It is not until 1864 that we find him insisting that the Negro race be given equal political and legal rights after the war is ended.

Expediency may have been some fraction of the explanation. It may still have been political expediency which helped change his mind. Emancipation had elicited none of the unfavorable repercussions at home and abroad which he had feared. It had given the Union forces 130,000 additional recruits for working and fighting against the Confederacy. And it had notably weakened the South.

Pointless Violence

BY THE same token, how needless the Civil War now seems. Lincoln was perhaps the least warlike President who ever lived in the White House. His hand was completely forced by the firing on Fort Sumter. There are very few passages in his writings tinged with the slightest bitterness toward the Southern leaders or the Southern States.

Lincoln had already estimated the value of the slaves at perhaps one billion dollars. Certainly in time, with slavery becoming ever less profitable, the Federal Government would have purchased and freed the unfortunate Negroes.

A second act of pointless violence, the assassination of Lincoln, once again turned history in an evil direction. Every passage in this encyclopedia on the forthcoming Reconstruction demonstrates that Lincoln was determined to show nothing but friendliness and Christian brotherhood toward the defeated South; that he would have used the Federal Treasury to aid in quick rehabilitation (of areas which still are suffering from the war and its vengeful aftermath.)

In this encyclopedia you will find the words of a great man. Even ripped from context, his phrases still ring with the poetry of conviction. S. N.

Success Story

A Careerist Triumphant Over Polio

Edited by John Barkham

INTERRUPTED MELODY. By Marjorie Lawrence. Appleton-Century-Crofts. 301 pp. $3.50.

THIS is more than merely a singer's saga of success. It is also a story of the triumph of courage over bodily affliction. For many readers, the second of these two themes will be the more inspiring.

Miss Lawrence writes well, even when telling of the early years that took her from a ranch in Australia to the salons of Paris. Success came easily, and by the middle thirties she was acknowledged as one of the leading Wagnerian sopranos of the day. Then, just before a performance in Mexico nine years ago, she was stricken with polio and paralyzed. Instantly her career came to a halt. The last third of the book recounts graphically the long, hard, bitter business of getting back on her feet again.

The soprano is not yet her old assured self again, and perhaps may never be. But already she can sing as well as she ever did, and, what's more, she can stand unassisted doing so. Hers was a tremendous, if still incomplete, victory over a crippling handicap, and the chief virtue of the book is that Miss Lawrence succeeds in communicating that victory to the reader.

Men in Battle

THE STRANGE LAND. By Ned Calmer. Scribner. 326 pp. $3.

THIS novel by Ned Calmer, a CBS news commentator, places him in the John Hersey class of reporter who is able to transmute his war experiences into something approaching literature. It is the story of a six-day assault on the Siegfried Line in November, 1944, and of what happened to a handful of people involved in that operation. As such, it possesses a realism and universality that will strike many an echoing chord in those who knew the real thing.

Mr. Calmer has an observant eye and a biting style. His divisional commander, bent on personal publicity and a Pentagon job, and his syndicated columnist, who talked big and acted small, are portraits from the life etched in acid. And his doughboys, fighting their bloody way round the pillboxes in an unnecessary attack, are as real as any in the pages of fiction.

There is more to this tightly constructed story than apt characterization. Calmer uses a taut, lean prose which recreates, as vividly as fact, the tension, frustration and despair of those bitter autumn days. With this, his third book, Calmer takes his place in the forefront of our upcoming novelists.

Faith Against Bullets

THE TORMENTORS, By Richard Cargoe. Sloane. 250 pp. $3.

MR. CARGOE (the pseudonym of a British author) cherishes the belief that spiritual strength can conquer physical brutality. At least, that is the theme of his novel, and he has written it with a passion and power that bespeaks his own faith.

A group of prisoners is sent to Siberia in the care of a Soviet guard. The prisoners adjust themselves to a life of hardship, pain and indignity, and in time there grows up between them and their guard (representing the omnipotent state) an unspoken comradeship. Then the guard is recalled for indoctrination, and when he returns he is a changed man. The climax of the story finds the prisoners condemning the guard, not he them, and the author would have us believe the faith of the prisoners prevails over the might of the guard, who sprays them with bullets as they sleep.

What Mr. Cargoe has really written is a soaring affirmation of the human spirit, and as such it must command respect. But even Gandhi, that expert politician, knew that faith alone is not enough. The two hundred million prisoners in Soviet Russia will need more than hope to strike down their guards.

Notes On the Margin

By Lee Grove

TO IRVING BRANT, biographer of James Madison, has come the distinction of upsetting one of history's most taken-for-granted little applecarts—the spelling of the first name of the fourth President's wife.

Correcting countless books, which gives it as "Dolly Madison" or "Dorothy Payne Madison," Brant, who lives at 3333 M st. se., has found that "Dolley" Madison is correct.

"Dolley Madison's spelling of her name became apparent the instant family manuscripts were looked into," Brant said. "She, her husband, her son and her lawyers all spelled it 'Dolley.'

"It appears that way in the original text of legal documents, but is commonly changed to 'Dolly' in copies made by clerks.

"Inquiry at Gilford College, North Carolina, where the minutes of the New Garden (Quaker) Monthly Meeting are preserved, disclosed that it was 'Dolley' in the record of her birth," according to Brant, who goes into the matter in the key third volume, "James Madison, Father of the Constitution, 1787-1800," of his four-volume work, due the end of March from Bobbs-Merrill.

Brant, who is now working on the last volume toward 1952 publication, thinks Mrs. Madison's given name may have come from the pet name of a family connection.

Remember 'It'?

A BIT of flamboyant literary history is recalled in the retrospective photographic exhibit at Harris & Ewing, 1313 F st. nw.

Among the pictures in the forty-fifth anniversary exhibit is one of Elinor Glyn, who once lived in Georgetown, according to H. & E.'s Andrew (Buck) May.

The "red-haired, green-eyed, sinuous-formed figure in English society" was the author of "Three Weeks," "It" and other "best sellers of slightly seamy, romantic love," to borrow the phrase of a New York Times obituary writer who had apparently not kept up with current fiction. In fact, said the notice of Mrs. Glyn's death in London September 23, 1943, shortly before her seventy-ninth birthday, she "gave 'it' a new meaning."

Mrs. Glyn, an impeccably respectable person in private life, described herself, in a day before psychiatry had made people self-conscious, as "instinctively a high priestess of the God of Love."

Her first books were staid affairs, but—with one eye on the family finances, it is said—she let loose with "Three Weeks" in 1907. "Let loose" is the phrase, because as soon as the book was published it caused a furor.

A Boston bookseller was fined at the instigation of the Watch and Ward Society; Anthony Comstock of the Society for the Suppression of Vice, in New York, denounced it, and many reviewers agreed with the St. Paul Pioneer Press, which called it "fit only for the garbage pail."

Possibly agreeing with the Baltimore Sun, which called the book "an example" of the most brilliant twentieth century fiction," about 50,000 American readers bought the work in the first three weeks.

Harris & Ewing

Elinor Glyn in 1908, when her home was on the northwest corner of 32d and P sts. nw., in Georgetown

Today, no one knows how many hundreds of thousands of copies of the story of the adulterous love in Switzerland and Venice of the young Englishman and the incognito queen of an unidentified kingdom, have been sold in the United States.

Perhaps unsophisticated readers of the time were flattered by Mrs. Glyn's asking: "Do you know Switzerland?—you who read. Do you know it at the beginning of May?" And the cozy references to a "a delicate truite bleu" and "the tenderest selle d agneau au lait."

Or maybe it was the description of the hero finding the fair Russian, 10 years his senior, reclining on the tigerskin rug, "a heap of rarely bound books at her side, while between her red lips was a rose not redder than they—an almost scarlet rose."

But whatever the cause, Mrs. Glyn—who said she had taught Rudolph Valentino and Gloria Swanson "a great deal about the art of making love before a camera"—really "wowed" readers and moviegoers.

18 Reproductions of Oils

Churchill Art 'Chapter' Given Book of Its Own

By Jane Watson Crane

PAINTING AS A PASTIME. By Winston S. Churchill. Whittlesey. $2.50

AMONG his other distinctions, Winston Churchill is credited with being the Prometheus who lit the torch of enthusiasm for amateur painting which is sweeping the Western World.

"Painting as a Pastime" was first published as a chapter in Churchill's book, "Amid These Storms," which appeared between wars. The essay is now attractively presented between covers of its own, with 18 color reproductions of the author's work in oils. If it has given rise to a spate of volumes of the "how-to-be-an-artist-in-10-easy-lessons" school, Churchill is certainly not to blame.

In his commentary, there is every indication of an attitude that does not belittle painting but reveres it. Quite aside from the fame of the author, the brief test stands on its own as a masterly account of human experience.

Taking up painting as a form of distraction at the age of 40, Churchill found his eyes opened to the visual wonders of the world. His pastime brought release for pent-up energy and keen enjoyment. In the prose for which he is renowned he invites others to plunge in and try it. But he admonishes:

"The truth and beauty of line and form which by the slightest touch or twist of the brush a real artist imparts to every feature of his design must be founded on long, hard, persevering apprenticeship and a practice so habitual that it has become instinctive. We must not be too ambitious. We cannot aspire to masterpieces. We may content ourselves with a joy ride in a paint box. And for this, Audacity is the only ticket."

In "Painting as a Pastime," Churchill has said much in little space, without wandering down the lanes of theory or climbing out on the precarious limbs of aestheticism. What he brings out, perhaps better than anyone else could, is that the pursuit of art offers an enrichment to living, a view quite the opposite from those who regard it as an escape from life.

About Books

BOOKS constitute capital. A library book lasts as long as a house, for hundreds of years. It is not, then, an article of mere consumption, but fairly of capital. Often, in the case of professional men setting out in life, it is their only capital.

A Powerful First Novel

Devastating Twist on Prejudice

By Sterling North

BEETLECREEK. By William Demby. Rinehart. 223 pp. $2.50.

SO SUBTLE and pervasive is the power of prejudice, that only through the most unpredictable plot twists can the literary moralist make the average reader admit and challenge his own bigotry.

In recent years, only three novels have done it successfully: "Kingsblood Royal," by Sinclair Lewis; "Gentleman's Agreement," by Laura Z. Hobson, and now "Beetlecreek," by William Demby.

DEMBY

None of these books is a masterpiece. Each has a tricky twist which militates against the smooth inevitability of great fiction. But the "twisteroo" (as they call it in Hollywood story conferences) is precisely what the author was forced to devise to catch the reader off guard.

In "Kingsblood Royal," as you will remember, Sinclair Lewis completely establishes the fact that Neil Kingsblood, "red-headed, blue-eyed, stalwart, cheerful, and as free of scholarship as he is of malice," is a typical young Babbitt of Grand Republic, Minn.; a thoroughly standardized Caucasian suburbanite and an asssitant cashier in the local bank. Because he is so obviously an undistinguished member of the great American majority, the reader accepts him completely and perhaps even indentifies himself with the hero.

Then Lewis slips through the reader's guard with a damaging left hook. Kingsblood finds to his amazement that he has Negro blood in his veins. And instead of hiding the evidence, he reveals it. Against his will, the reader is immediately involved in a major moral problem. He cannot help asking himself, "What would I have done in a similar situation?" And, if he is honest, he will have to admit that some part of race prejudice is dangerous poppycock if not actual mass insanity.

Lonely Old Eccentric

LAURA HOBSON was equally crafty in her approach. Phil Green, a magazine writer who is not a Jew, poses as a Jew to gather material for a series of articles on anti-Semitism. Overnight, this typical, clean-cut Nordic male begins to feel the slurs, sneers and restrictions of the "Gentleman's Agreement." The honest reader is once again shocked into an unwilling admission by being made to feel how viciously unjust the whole pattern of race relations must seem to a member of the minority.

William Demby, a young Negro writer, has come up with a plot twist at least as effective as those concocted by Lewis and Hobson.

In "Beetlecreek" he portrays a community populated entirely by Negroes with the single exception of an eccentric old white man by the name of Bill Trapp. Trapp has had a lonely life. As an adopted orphan, his only friendships have been those with his "sister" and with an old, drunken Italian trapeze artist and dog-trainer (both dead years ago). Trapp has retired to a tiny farm in the Negro community of Beetlecreek. And, feeling unwanted and lost, he has dived to himself for 15 years, becoming a frightening legend to his Negro neighbors.

Hungry for human companionship, Trapp makes friends with Johnny Johnson, a visiting Negro boy from Pittsburgh whom he catches stealing apples. Slowly other children gather the courage to visit his shack.

Then Trapp makes his fatal mistake. He plans a party for his new friends; the Negro children and also a few white youngsters who have ventured over from the other side of the creek.

What then befalls has about it an inevitability which the more professional novels by Lewis and Hobson lack. The irony is more profound. The plot twist more devastating.

'Turn the Tables'

SUSPECTED of being a sex fiend (which he is not), the kindly, simple old white man becomes the object of fantastic slander and blazing race prejudice. The Negro preacher who has accepted his wheelbarrow load of pumpkins for the festival now preaches against him. Tongues wag at the barber shop and the beer tavern. The foul-mouthed young Negro hoodlums begin planning their vicious revenge.

Slim, the small-time adjunct to the numbers racket, puts it succinctly: "Now you turn the tables on this thing. Make like there was a colored man lived all by hisself in a white part of town . . . and he starts all this monkey business with white girls, mind ya, what do you think would happen to him? You just pick up any newspaper from the last few years and read what happened to them Scottsboro boys."

There are flaws in this first novel. The character of Trapp is not completely convincing. In his desire to do absolute justice, Mr. Demby has perhaps overidealized his white eccentric. The author has followed the almost universal tendency of young contemporary novelists to flaunt four-letter words. And the dreamlike, episodic structure of the story lacks cohesion, particularly in the early chapters.

But the power is there; the compassion for men of all races; the cry in the night for human understanding and human decency. And when one realizes the depth and breadth of character it takes for a young Negro to admit that prejudice is a universal failing—a poison which works in the brains of the minorities as well as the ruling majority—you have some measure of William Demby. This novel most certainly deserves some honor like the George Washington Carver Award and a place high on the best seller list.

A Lot of Story—Even for 564 Pages

A Godey's Book Gal Pushes West

THE JUBILEE TRAIL. By Gwen Bristow. Crowell. 564 pp. $3.

IN THE SUMMER of 1844 Miss Garnet Cameron was graduated from Miss Wayne's Select Academy for Young Ladies, in rural upper Manhattan, but neither at the academy nor at her home in sedate Union Square did the eager, select Miss Garnet learn anything more about life than could be gleaned from the monthly Godey's Lady's Book.

It was therefore a welcome diversion when—in this March choice of the Literary Guild—Oliver Hale came to town.

Oliver came from a Proper background, but was engaged in the Western trade, meaning he was a trader in pre-Yankee California. Oliver was a gentleman, but the West had humanized him, and he and Garnet were soon married and on their way West, via New Orleans.

In New Orleans they met up with Florinda Grove, a superlative blonde variety entertainer of the heart-of-gold variety. Florinda, for involved reasons, has to flee town. Oliver and Garnet smuggle her out in widow's weeds and put her aboard at St. Louis-bound river boat.

They think they have seen the last of the gay Florinda, but it is only the beginning of a story-long relationship.

Close-Mouthed Pair

FLORINDA turns up in Santa Fe, where a number of other characters are introduced. Chief among them are John Ives, a strong, sternly silent sort, who is Oliver's trading partner in California, and Texas, who also never has much to say.

Together they set off in a pack train across the Old Spanish Trail for California. It is called the "Jubilee Trail" because it

"Tain't no place for the peaky and pale,
You gotta keep tough if you gonta keep ridin',
Ridin' down the Jubilee Trail."

and people feel like a jubilee when they get to the end of the journey.

The going is rough and the inevitable Indian attack comes on this leg of the trip. Garnet shoots her first man, and even if it is an Indian it upsets her. The less delicate Florinda may have accounted for two of the redskins. But unfortunately one of the diggers' arrows pinks Garnet in the arm and the wound has to be cauterized. Texas, in a realistic scene, performs this painful task.

During the trip West Garnet has occasionally had doubts about her affectionate husband's character, though there never seemed to be anything she could identify save his unexplained fear of meeting his arrogant brother, Charles.

In California things come to a head. Oliver is killed by a native grandee, embittered because his daughter had killed herself and the child she had born to Oliver, and the widowed Garnet is aided by her friends. Garnet's son is delivered by Texas, who turns out to be a cashiered Army surgeon.

When Garnet's brother-in-law, Charles, attempts to take her child, she shoots him. As a last favor to Garnet, Texas, expiring himself, confesses the killing of Charles, leaving the way open for John Ives and Garnet to be married and start for the newly discovered gold fields. Florinda, too, takes care of herself, as she always has.

Florinda is the most interesting person in "Jubilee Trail." Though something of a stock character, she has vitality and can be pictured on the movie screen with little effort. Her only trouble is that she conventionally becomes respectable.

Gwen Bristow in her book shows an understandable appreciation of the natural beauties of the West, and her accounts of the life of the period sound plausible. But because she has endeavored to tell too much of a story, her novel, even in the length of 564 pages, tends to flounder around a bit. "Jubilee Trail," however, is good winter hammock reading. Can Parking Solution Be in Sight?

By Harry M. Stull

WASHINGTON is fast becoming the home of frustrated motorists. An automobile is becoming a liability to anyone who desires to visit the downtown section, and even in the residential sections parking space is at a premium most of the time. No-parking signs are literally piled one on another until the confused motorist is driven to placing his car on a commercial parking lot, where the charges are in most cases out of line with the services rendered.

STULL

Several agencies of the local government have given much time and attention to the problem, but very little real progress has been made. One local builder, however, who has just completed an office building, has come forward with a new idea, whereby an office worker may "park at his desk." Ramps are constructed so that a motorist may drive into the building and up to the door of his office and there park his car for the day.

If this experiment proves successful, it may be extended. It might very well play a large part in solving the downtown parking problem.

The Distaff Angle

THE League of Women Voters has been a leader in the movement to secure home rule for the District. It has pointed out the successful efforts of women in winning voting rights as American citizens, and has suggested that similar efforts now would greatly aid in obtaining these rights for the women of the District, who have never profited from the constitutional amendment granting suffrage to the female sex.

The league has heretofore been extremely active in the effort to secure a constitutional amendment granting the people of the District the right to representation in the Congress and a vote for President. Lately, however, the league has directed much of its efforts toward obtaining the necessary signers to a petition to bring the Keefauver home rule bill to the floor of the House for consideration. Their campaign to enfranchise the women of the District by first permitting them to vote for their local governing body has done much toward convincing members of the House that this legislation should not die in the House District Committee.

Budding Criminals

IN THE investigation of crime in the District, the District subcommittee now at work might well give consideration to the growing crime among juveniles. Reports are frequently made of beatings or intimidations of school children by neighborhood toughs; pocketbook snatchings and yoke robberies by teenagers.

Whether there is laxity on the part of the Police Department or too much leniency on the part of Juvenile Court officers, the fact remains that these roving bands of potential criminals are making many parts of the city unsafe for women and children. With due regard for the value of the parole system in dealing with juveniles, many citizens believe it is time that law enforcement officials got tough and instilled some fear of the law. It appears that placing these young law violators on probation time after time is no solution.

Unnecessarily Short-Handed

THE FAILURE of the White House to appoint the three additional judges to the Municipal Court and fill the vacancy on the Public Utilities Commission has placed an unnecessary burden on those bodies. The increasing work of the court, which justified the legislation increasing the number of judges, overloads the present judges and builds up a backlog of pending cases. Without its full complement of members, the Public Utilities Commission cannot function properly at a time when pressing problems concerning our utilities must be solved.

Governor Battle's 45-million-dollar school building appropriation has passed the General Assembly and 30 million dollars are to be made available "immediately." But many anxious school boards and boards of supervisors would like to know how soon is "immediately."

MUSE

The first checks will go out—it is this writer's prediction—the first week in March. Of course, the operation will proceed with maximum dispatch, but several things will have to be attended to before the money is handed out.

As soon as the bill is engrossed and signed by the Governor, the Department of Education will swing into action in collecting a report from each locality as to its school enrollment, or "membership," as of December 1, 1949.

When all the reports are in, the Department of Education accountants will get busy figuring out each locality's share on the basis of this information—each locality's share, that it, of 27 million dollars. Only 90 percent of the fund is to be handed out in this way.

Meanwhile the State Board of Education will meet on February 22 to lay down the formula, or the rules, to be followed in meeting the requirements of the law as to school building program, etc. Presumably the rules will be prepared in tentative form beforehand by the Department of Education. After approval by the Board of Education, they will have to be approved by the Governor.

Then copies of the rules will be mailed out to the localities, and, as soon as the first locality has fulfilled these requirements, the money will begin to flow.

The equalization fund—10 percent of 30 million, or 3 million dollars—will require study and take longer. This is the fund from which the allocations will be made to poorer localities over and above their proportionate share of the 27 million.

Pleasant Dinner

HOTEL RICHMOND gossip to the contrary notwithstanding, nothing really happened at the Commonwealth Club Tuesday evening. Representative Howard W. Smith merely entertained the State Senators and Delegates from the Eighth Congressional District at a pleasant and relatively "nonpolitical" dinner. It left the question of: Will Judge Smith run again this year?—right where it was before.

The Congressman, who represents the long district embracing Chalottesville and coming right up to the District of Columbia, has long considered retiring after his present term, for the sake of his health, but recent insistence in many quarters that he run once more has left the question wide open.

Senator Harry F. Byrd may feel that Smith, still holding his seat in Congress, will be an additional bulwark against the storm which is gathering for 1952, when Francis Pickens Miller is widely believed to be planning a hell-for-leather campaign for his Senate seat.

Others are insisting that Judge Smith run again for a variety of reasons. Some, no doubt, on the theory that he who insists the hardest will get Smith's support for his own candidacy if and when the Congressman should decide to retire. Longer range aspirants would like to see Smith carry on until they themselves are ready to take the plunge, rather than see a younger man get entrenched in his seat in Congress.

Two Kinds of Motives

THESE, of course, are only the selfish motives. Politicians always have two kinds of motives. Most of the aspirants are also devoted admirers of the veteran Congressman.

And, if Smith doesn't run? Calvin Haley, the Congressman's secretary, is himself a politician with no mean following and is widely regarded as a possible candidate. Two circuit court judges, Paul Brown, of Fairfax, and Walter McCarthy, of Arlington, are interested—in a serenely judicial way. State Senator E. C. McCue, of Charlottesville, is outstanding in the southern end of the district. Two Alexandria men, Delegate Armistead Boothe and State Senator Andrew Clarke, are in the not-now-but-maybe-next-time group. The anti-Smith and pro-Miller faction might bring out former State Senator Frank Bell, jr., of Arlington.

Two other Arlington men formerly in the picture are now considered out of it. Former State Senator William D. Medley has told friends that he is positively not to be considered, and present State Senator Charles R. Fenwick is believed to be bypassing the congressional race with a view to running for Governor in 1953.

Miller hasn't been seen in Richmond since the General Assembly convened, but, in a quiet way, he is the man they're still afraid of. His dead silence has elements of a cold war strategy. Contemplating the mid-winter sunshine on his Farmington acres, the defeated candidate for Governor is as aggravating as the Tar Baby when Brer Rabbit swatted him. "He just sit dar an' don't say nothin'."

Maryland Affairs

Auto Inspection a Major Issue

By James P. Connolly

ONE of the most controversial matters at the present session of the Legislature is the bill for compulsory automobile inspections. It has aroused more widespread interest (and stronger feeling) than almost any other proposal, and public opinion on it is sharply divided. It might overshadow any other measure at the meeting.

CONNOLLY

The split in opinion is not so much over inspections as it is over which is needed most—car inspections or closer examination of drivers. This sudden doubt about the driver is itself open to some doubt. At the moment the driver is not the issue. No bill is up for a longer look at him. He gets at least a once-over-lightly when he gets his license. His jalopy escapes even that.

State Motor Vehicle Commissioner Arthur H. Brice, who has proposed the car inspection plan, urges priority for it. He grants that driver examinations are not ideal, but said "The Maryland physical check on drivers compares favorably with those of other States."

The same cannot be said for Maryland's nonexistent car inspections. Many States insist on car inspections. Maryland is not one of them. Twenty-nine States have reduced their automobile accident rates appreciably. Maryland is not one of them, either.

The National Safety Council reports that 16 percent of all cars in fatal accidents have been found wanting. Spot checks in Baltimore have shown as many as 25 percent of all cars sampled to be defective. The spot checks were made in 1948. And, as has been implied, States that have established regular car inspections have reduced their accident rates. New Jersey is one example close to home. In the first year of its inspection system, it reduced its accident total from approximately 7000 to 5000.

No one makes the wild claim that a Maryland inspection would end accidents or even weed out all unfit machines. But, taking the National Safety Council's figure of 16 percent as the proportion of defective cars contributing to fatal accidents, if Maryland's annual traffic death rate could be reduced by that degree, inspection would more than pay for itself in the saving in human life—to say nothing of injury, suffering and property damage.

A Few Is Too Many

MARYLAND'S traffic death rate is more than 400 a year. Last year, according to the Maryland Traffic Safety Commission, the number was 440. The Legislative Council, which also is recommending passage of the compulsory inspection bill, thinks 16 percent of so many lives is worth saving, to put it mildly.

"Who shall measure the value of human life?" asks Joseph R. Byrnes, president of the State Senate. "Beyond doubt, superannuated and defective cars take a substantial toll of human lives. If they be a small minority of the awesome total, they still are too many. The Legislative Council feels that if only a relative few were saved through the inspection plan, the saving still would be worth the cost and effort."

The cost to the State would be nothing. To the motorist, it would be a 75-cent inspection fee. Against it, balance the cost in human lives of not having it, incalculable as the cost is.

The plan calls for semiannual inspections and the establishment of 28 State-owned inspection stations—5 in or around Baltimore and 1 in each county seat. The stations would be built with a $2,500,000 bond isue, for which the bill provides, and the issue would be retired from fees. The stations would open June 1, 1951.

An Emergency Start

MEANWHILE, however, Commissioner Brice wants to start the system in private garages to get it under way. For that reason, he has asked that the bill be enacted as an emergency measure at the present short session or budget meeting of the Assembly. The private garages would keep 65 cents of the inspection fee, until the State stations take over.

Maryland had compulsory inspections in private garages prior to 1941. They were abandoned when the war came on and every car, regardless of condition, had to do its bit. Efforts to renew the inspection system in the Legislature of 1947 and 1948 failed. But this newest effort has more force and support, official and unofficial, behind it. It is more likely to succeed.

Price Support Is Also Padding Young Ribs

SHAKESPEARE wrote about the "ill wind that blows no man to good," but he was speaking for Ralph S. Trigg.

Trigg has charge of Government purchases under the farm price support system. Every day's mail brings him complaints about the program from irate taxpayers or hungry consumers. But the same mail brings letters of approval of the give-away program which he operates along with it.

Trigg is both administrator of the Production and Marketing Administration and president of the Commodity Credit Corporation. On one hand he buys billions of dollars' worth of food and fibers from the farmers to keep prices high. On the other he gives away millions of dollars worth to school kids, invalids and old folks who otherwise would do without.

The Nation has heard a lot recently about the wholesale destruction of potatoes made necessary by the strange assortment of laws that add up to the confusing Agriculture Act of 1949. But little is heard about the potatoes and other foodstuffs that flow from that program to the needy, the ill and the aged.

Our Own Backyard

STATISTICS aren't easy reading. Sometimes they are necessary to tell a story, however. This is one of those times.

In the six months from July 1 to New Year's Day, more than $2,250,000 worth of food, bought under the price support program, was distributed free in the District of Columbia and nearby Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia.

Altogether it totaled 20,564,000 pounds, and included potatoes, apples, butter, eggs, honey, dried milk, pears, dried prunes, raisins, cheese, canned peaches, peanut butter, canned tomatoes, tomato paste, sweet potatoes and concentrated orange juice.

In the District, 32,655 children in 67 schools benefited. In Maryland, 141,559 children in 624 schools were given free meals under one part of the program and 62,029 in 425 schools under another part. Some shared in both programs.

In Virginia, 182,174 kids in 1183 schools partook of the free food made possible by the price support program, while under the school lunch law 143,307 youngsters in 924 schools got food they wouldn't have had otherwise.

In West Virginia the story is the same. A total of 122,135 youngsters in 1458 schools was fed.

Institutional Help

BUT that isn't all. A lot of food went to inmates of public institutions. A total of 6137 persons in 29 institutions in the District was provided free food; 24,109 in 103 Maryland institutions; 20,383 in 62 institutions in Virginia, and 12,675 in 64 institutions in West Virginia benefited.

In dollars, the price support contributions to the District in the six months amounted to $47,462; in Maryland to $387,692; in Virginia to $1,182,972, and in West Virginia to $649,479.

In other words, the Commodity Credit Corporation distributed $2,267,605 worth of food to the three States and the District.

In the last two weeks Congress spent hours passing the buck for the impending destruction of upwards of 40 million bushels of potatoes bought under the price support program. Estimates are that this year's potato mess will cost around 100 million dollars, or about 70 cents for each man woman and child in the United States

Overlooked is how much of this actually will be used. For instance, almost a quarter of a million dollars' worth of potatoes went free to the schools in Washington and the three nearby States. On the books of the Agriculture Department, they are listed as 6,684,050 pounds. They cost $223,916, plus freight.

Question of Freight

RECENTLY the country's lawmakers ordered a stop to some of this distribution. The last session of Congress passed the Agricultural Act of 1949, authored by Senator and former Agriculture Secretary Clinton P. Anderson (D., N. Mex.).

During debate, Chairman Elmer Thomas (D., Okla.) of the Senate Agriculture Committee offered an amendment, known as Section 416, designed to provide for easier distribution to the needy of surplus food stocks.

Curiously, that section is accomplishing just the opposite. It provides that food "in danger of deterioration or spoilage" may be offered to the Munitions Board or other Federal agencies to be used in barter for goods needed for Government stockpiling.

If it is not accepted, the food then must be offered in turn to school lunch programs, the Indian Bureau and Federal, State and local public welfare organizations. They must pay the freight. If not taken by them, it can be offered on similar terms to domestic private welfare organizations and then to welfare organizations for the assistance of needy abroad.

Before this law was passed, the CCC had been paying the freight. Among local and nearby schools and institutions, this reporter was unable to find more than one or two which have funds to meet freight charges.

Such charges may run high. Freight for potatoes from Maine to Washington, for instance, is 91 cents a hundred pounds—more than one-fourth the entire cost of the commodity.

Some Come Free

DEPARTMENT attorneys have ruled that freight charges must be assessed on commodities for which price supports are mandatory. Besides potatoes, this includes butter, honey, dried milk and cheese among the commodities which local agencies got free last year.

However, Section 32 funds may be used to pay the freight on "non-mandatory" commodities. Section 32 funds come from 30 percent of the Nation's customs receipts set aside by Congress for the benefit of agriculture. Thus, unless Congress again amends the law, the only surplus commodities furnished local agencies entirely free will be apples, eggs, citrus fruits, vegetables and other items not on the mandatory support list.

Also, under the National School Lunch Act, schools are allotted certain commodities as well as cash subsidies for use in providing daily rations of food and milk for growing children. The program has resulted, to use the words of H. C. Albin, Agriculture Department expert in charge of the distribution, in "a lot of kids drinking milk and eating potatoes who wouldn't otherwise."

Distribution in the District is handled for both schools and public institutions by Harry Gardner, superintendent of the school lunch program.

Thanks to the National School Lunch Act, this lunch cost 16-year-old Jane Stones, a student at Jefferson High School, only 25 cents. The special plate shown included turkey hash, boiled potatoes, mixed vegetables, half an orange, bread and butter, milk and orange juice. Miss Stones lives at 653 E st. sw.

10 Cents to Some

THE program follows a general pattern. There are three types of distribution.

Children whose families are unable to pay for the lunches are given them free. In other cases they pay part; for instance, in the District some get a 25-cent lunch for 10 cents. Others pay the full 25 cents for a meal which, without the Government contribution of surplus food, would cost much more.

The District lunch program is limited to junior high and high schools because the Government's rules call for supervised meals in school cafeterias.

In addition to the surplus food, the Government contributes 6 to 9 cents for each hot plate meal.

In addition to the free meals, the National School Lunch Act provides for what is known in Washington as the "Penny Milk Program." Each child gets half a pint of milk for 1 cent. An additional 2 cents is contributed by the Agriculture Department. The remainder is paid by the District Government.

When some seasonal foods come in, such as apples, the general distribution is free. Each of the kids is given an apple a day until the supply is exhausted.

Arlington's Share

AN EXAMPLE of how individual communities profit by the program is Arlington, Va. There, Miss Grace Schwartz, cafeteria supervisor, reports that 16,299 county school children get milk each day, while 407 get the "Type A" 25-cent lunch. Only three schools, with cafeterias, qualify for the latter. Here are some of the commodities Arlington schools have received from the Government so far this school year:

200 cases of eggs, worth $8000; 120 cases of butter, $2520; 230 bushels of apples, $725; 8500 pounds of potatoes, $276.50; 25 cases peanut butter, $300; 100 cases peaches, $575; 125 cases honey, $750; 60 cases dried milk, $405; 50 cases tomatoes, $225, and 100 bushels pears, $500.

The National School Lunch program has become big business for grocers throughout the country. In the last fiscal year, according to John T. Thompson of the Production and Marketing Administration, the program cost $58,800,000 besides surplus commodities, and virtually all of that was spent in grocery stores.

7½ Million Participate

THE SCHOOL lunch program nationally:

1. Serves about 1½ billion pounds of food annually.
2. Serves more than 7,500,000 school children free or part-pay meals.
3. Supplies 245 million quarts of fluid milk, 18 million dozen eggs, 170 million pounds of butter and other dairy products, and 83 million pounds of meat.
4. About one-third of the budget goes for fresh and canned fruits and vegetables.
5. Serves about 100 million pounds of bread and other foods made from grain; 31 million pounds of sugar and other sweetenings, and 24 million pounds of fats and oils in addition to butter.

"Millions of kids are developing eating habits that will make them better grocery customers for the rest of their lives," Thompson says.

Which twin has the balanced meal? You can't go wrong. Both Joan and Jean Towler, 8-year-old twins of 821 G st. sw., have the 25-cent special plate served at Jefferson Junior High School. They go to Fairbrother Elementary School, but students of nearby elementary and parochial schools are allowed to use the Jefferson cafeteria

Clock Turned Back to 1928 in Germany

By Fred M. Hechinger

FRANKFURT.—They've turned back the clock in Western Germany—turned it back to the days of the Weimar Republic and 1928. And the big question in everyone's mind is: Will history repeat itself?

"Your democracy may be fine for America," I was told again and again. "But Germany needs a different kind. Germany needs leadership with a strong hand."

A prominent trade union leader, anti-Communist and anti-Nazi Georg Reuter, explained, "Before Hitler came to power, you Americans mistook the Weimar Republic for a real democracy. It was only a potential one. Now after the war you are repeating the same mistake; you have helped reestablish Bonn in the image of Weimar."

In the French zone, a highly respected German educational leader was even more direct in his accusations against Allied postwar operations.

"When you came to liberate us from our oppressors," he said dolefully, "we thought you'd help us stage a revolution against all German extremists—against the kind of autocratic society that fostered Hitler. But instead, you stopped the revolution before it got started, simply by turning the clock back to the day before yesterday."

Different Timetable

THOUGH the clock does appear to have been turned back in the Western zone, the comparison with 1928 stops abruptly at the Iron Curtain on the Elbe. As far as Eastern Germany is concerned, the 1928 period is long since past, and the tragedy that began with the rise of dictatorship in 1933 is already in its first act.

There, totalitarians are holding the reins of power after superficially changing their color from brown to red. The uniform, the heavy boot, the machine gun have become the state.

One hope for Western Germany is that the East zone's flashback to 1933 may serve as a tragic warning to democratic elements in the West. But still, the goosestep clatters ominously over the Allied-occupied zones.

In their struggle to overthrow the democratic government and establish some kind of totalitarian regime, extremists of the right in Western Germany are quite prepared to join forces with the Communists.

The speaker for the Free Democratic Party—listed as a moderate rightwing party—recently labeled the Marshall Plan "American economic colonization." Then he went on to relate a fantastic tale about 10,000 tons of rotten rags which the European Cooperation Administration had forced Germany to accept and pay for.

While this "conservative" speaker gave no source for his information, he could easily have found it in any Communist-controlled newspaper in Germany.

A few days later in Marburg, students marched through the town, pushing aside the police with sneers. "We've all been storm troopers," they shouted. "We don't need you to keep law and order." That night the Nazi Horst Wessel echoed from secret meetings.

Depression Helped

CALLING on a military government official, I expressed my fears about the future of West Germany. "Totalitarianism isn't inevitable," he tried to reassure me. "Even in 1928 there were the democratic parties. Opposite them stood the vanguard of dictatorship. Either side had a chance. Then the depression came, and with all the social and economic turmoil, the Germans took the easy answer. It doesn't have to happen that way again—but it could."

Today there's plenty of economic uneasiness. West Germany has almost two million unemployed—more than double the number a year ago. Still, the well-to-do cavort in luxurious night clubs and dine in black-market restaurant.

"It makes no sense to me that with so much rebuilding needed to be done, there are a quarter of a million jobless construction workers," said a young man speaking at a Frankfurt meeting. "I'd sooner see Hitler's compulsory labor service come back"

An alarming number of persons at the meeting agreed vociferously with him.

As in the '20s, the German government interprets free economy so rigidly in terms of lack of planning that drastic, regimented plans of the extremists are finding willing ears.

Frankfurt's famed Kaiserstrasse is replete with well-stocked shops. But with a pair of shoes equal to a workingman's wages for a week, abundance simply leads to resentment.

I remarked on the luxury to a pretty hostess at one Frankfurt night club. "It's all right for the very few who can afford it," she said bitterly. "But at 4 in the morning I go home to my bombed-out basement flat. It reminds me of the '20s—when my father was unemployed and the night clubs were enjoying a thriving business."

300,000 'Fat Cats'

THE Economic-Scientific Institute of Cologne put the widening gap between the masses and the high life into revealing statistics: 8,500,000 families live on a standard 40 percent below the 1936 level, 2,500,000 families have a living standard 50 percent below that year, while 300,000 families are living better than even during Germany's period of maximum power and prosperity.

Added to the unemployed is a new postwar source of dissatisfaction: the 12 million homeless refugees, the so-called ethnic Germans who have been driven from their homes in eastern Europe.

Even in the worst days of the depression, the millions who hiked Hitler into power hoping to alleviate their misery didn't live in such slum conditions as these refugees in jam-packed barracks do today. It was from these camps that Alfred Loritz and his nationalist party recruited almost 700,000 votes in Bavaria alone last year.

In between the privileged few and the wretched many are millions of other Germans who shrug their shoulders and decline to take any part in the rebuilding of their country. The United States director of education, Dr. Alonzo G. Grace, estimates that such apathetic people include about 60 percent of the voting population. Just as in the turbulent days between the two wars, they are the undecided, but the potential followers.

Incredible Similarity

THE parallel between '28 and '50 seems almost incredible. Twenty years ago, the nationalists had ranted against "foreign chains," against reparations payments, against the alleged exploitation of victory to soften competition in German markets. Today, dollar aid from America has been either overlooked or branded as "capitalist imperialism" by Communists, as "Yankee enslavement" by Nazis.

Month after month of travel through Germany has impressed on me this parallel with 1928. The Bonn government is almost a carbon copy of the old Weimar Republic, even to the black, red and gold flag. More ominous yet, the nationalist colors of the rightists are once again the imperial black, white and red which Hitler ordered to be flown side by side with his swastika.

Most serious of all, the present government has taken into its coalition those same nationalist parties which stabbed the last democratic pre-Hitler governments in the back. Theodor Heuss, now the Bonn president, was among those who were forced to vote for the "enabling act" which gave the Nazis their fatal power.

In this atmosphere, Social Democrat Kurt Schumacher looked around the Bonn assembly and termed it "a Nazi parliament." Some of those present recalled that similar Schumacher statements during the stormy sessions of the late '20s were repeated until the militant anti-Nazi disappeared into a concentration camp for 10 years.

French Alert

ALERTED by their bitter experience and their geographic position, the French were among the first to worry over the 1928-1950 parallel. "In the late '20s," said one of General Koenig's top advisers, "the irredentists used their government as a rallying point for resistance at first and violent action later.

"They've started the game again. And Bonn will have to become stronger than Weimar to foil it."

A university professor echoed these fears, though he gave the Allies credit for trying. "When you let us experiment with the tools and techniques of democracy so soon," he told me, "I know you thought you were doing the democratic thing. But look at us now.

"We've got more than 15 parties already, and there will be more by the next election. Just like in the days of Weimar, the strength of our democratic forces is dissipated in splinter parties, so that apparently insignificant extremist groups can join in trying to defeat democracy."

But one German democratic leader, who had recently escaped from the Russian Zone and knew Soviet and Nazi concentration camps equally well, saw signs of hope for Western Germany.

"This time we don't have to remember past history to prevent it from repeating itself," he said. "We're now actually seeing history being reenacted in the Eastern Zone. Perhaps that will help us in the Bonn government to find the right turn where we took the wrong one in the Weimar Republic. We're at the crossroads now."

You Can Wear a Built-In Heater

By Alton L. Blakeslee

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—You winterize your car. How about winterizing yourself for winter comfort and health?

Here are some tips for keeping warm and avoiding colds. They are cited by Dr. L. P. Herrington, director of research of public health, Yale University.

Clothes help conserve body heat, of course. The best kind is loose clothing, which leaves an insulating layer of air between skin and the clothes.

One trick will get you more warmth out of clothes. That is to have them really warm when you put them on. The benefit isn't from having been near a radiator, but because they are dehydrated.

When you go outdoors, they soak up moisture from the air, and this makes the clothes gain heat. It's reverse evaporation. A heavy suit and coat, well dried out, will generate as much heat in a short time that way as your body normally produces in an hour or two, Dr. Herrington said.

Stoking the Fire

JUST RESTING, your body produces about 100 calories of heat an hour—enough in electrical energy to keep a 100-watt bulb burning. About 70 percent of this heat comes from your liver, intestines and other internal organs.

When the temperature drops, your body thermostats stir you to make muscles work and generate more heat. In heavy exercises, your heat production may triple, with two thirds of it coming from the big muscles.

But there's danger in this, if you aren't used to heavy exercise. The middle-aged man may feel wonderful shoveling snow, but the work may overload his heart and arteries, crumpling him up in a heart attack or stoke.

More food, especially proteins and fats, will boost heat production. A meal rich in meats and other proteins may make your body furnaces turn out 35 to 40 percent more heat in a short time.

For a good rest at night, keep your bedroom temperature between 50 and 65 degrees. This is the best range, as shown by two-year studies of sleepers at various tempeatures.

Fresh-air addicts, throwing the window wide open, have to pay more in fuel bills to warm the room next day, and don't get any apparent benefit from sleeping in 30 to 40-degree temperatures. If anything, they expose their noses and throats to too much cooling, which may make it easier for a head cold to get started.

You'll have a better chance against catching cold if you can keep your home at 50 percent humidity, in a temperature of 70 degrees. Above and below that humidity, germs thrown into the air live longer. The 50 percent humidity also seems best for human comfort.

Feet Play Tricks

IT IS debatable just how much plain exposure—such as getting your feet cold and wet—has to do with catching a cold, Dr. Herrington added. Your general health and state of immunity play a part.

But be extra careful about accidents when your feet are cold. There's less feeling in them, and you have a poor sense of foot position. Result: You're more likely to slip on icy pavements.

Your body uses the feet and hands as a way of conserving heat. The thousands of tiny capillaries carrying blood constrict, so less blood goes through and there is less cooling of the blood from these radiators. This constriction can last a long while after you come into a warm room.

Wintertime emotions can lead to cold feet, too. Emotional strains, even just talking about someone you don't like, will cool your fingertips.

In winter you feel spunkier, more aggressive. But so do other people, and you are likely to meet opposition, and hence emotional tension. Too much of the blood vessel constriction, for a long time, isn't healthful. It might even have something to do at times with respiratory diseases, Dr. Herrington said.

Just Rub Them

WHAT can you do about cold feet when you go to bed?

Cold feet at night in winter aren't unusual. While you're standing up, the blood vessels in the feet naturally constrict to offset the gravity pull of blood into the feet. If you really relax when you lie down, the blood vessels open to normal size, and your feet will warm up fast. Children usually don't have any trouble.

A warm bath, or massaging the toes, will do the tricks if you aren't good at relaxing.

Hitler Still Hard to Swallow

HANOVER (ONA).—The other day in this British-occupied city of Prussia, the water supply was reduced suddenly to a trickle, far insufficient for a metropolis of 350,000 plus the several thousand Tommies garrisoned here. There has been no scarcity of rain and snow this winter and the reservoir is full, so British headquarters summoned the responsible German functionaries and demanded why the interruption in the provision of aqua pura.

"We turned the water off ourselves," a spokesman finally confessed. "We made chemical tests near the intake pipe and found strong traces of quicklime and gypsum, making the water undrinkable."

"Well, what's quicklime and gypsum doing in the reservoir?" the British commanding officer asked testily.

The German functionaries looked still more distraught.

"Excellency, it comes from hundreds of plaster casts of Hitler, dumped in the reservoir by our citizenry. We've sent down divers to clean out the plaster busts."

Meeting Spring Along the Road South

By Katherine Barrett Pozer

MEETING spring along the roads to the south is always an exciting adventure. The sight of the first daffodils and spring flowers is followed by the more tropical things which we admire and can only hope to have in our own gardens with extra care and equipment. However, there are some of these southern plants which are finding their way north and are being grown with signal success.

There are so many plants which one finds listed as "hardy as far north as Washington, D. C." that we have become more or less spoiled and look with longing eyes at some of the southern flowers which are denied us.

This is particularly true of gardenias and camellias, both of which are grown around Norfolk with ease. There, in summer, small boys with great boxes of gardenias sell them for ten cents a bloom, and visits to the gardens of our friends make us envious as we watched them cut great sprays of the fragrant flowers.

For the present we must content ourselves with our house grown gardenias but we are finding ourselves on the fringes of the "camellia belt" which is spreading north and west of its original borders. A few years ago visitors to Maryland Garden Week marvelled as they saw outdoor camellias in bloom.

This particular estate had an expert gardener who had given them winter protection with a covering like a thatched cottage. But in the last year or two we have talked to a number of local gardeners who have carried their plants through the winter and had them bloom with little or no winter protection.

Recommended Types

CAMELLIAS are not really tropical plants as is so often believed. They require a cool winter season and are uninjured by light frosts. Plants have been known to withstand zero temperatures. Their hardiness as with most other plants depends on their condition. The foliage and wood will stand much more cold than the blooms and partly opened buds.

THE GARDENIA is one of the most popular flowers used for corsages or hair ornaments. It was named in honor of Alexander Garden, an American naturalist born in Charleston, S. C.

It is advised even in the south to cover if snow or sleet comes when color is showing. Covering should never be airtight. The best is pine boughs stuck in the ground or a covering of burlap placed over a light framework of stakes or chicken wire.

Being south in camellia time and having visited some of the shows and gardens where they are grown, we have at last decided to take the plunge and invest in a few of the recommended hardy varieties.

We discussed the growing of camellias with a nurseryman who for many years has had thousands of these plants in his Norfolk gardens and has been interested in the varieties which would prove successful as far north as Washington. He advised some of the following: Chandeleri elegans, a large loose double to peony type. This is cherry red with white markings. Caleb Cope, a full double coral pink.

Pink Perfection, the lovely clear pink which everyone admires, was on his list. Recently we saw one of these growing in a Roanoke garden, where winters are about as cold as they are in Washington. The plants which had survived several winters had eight buds and the owner told me she had had blooms each year and had given the plant no protection.

An Old Standby

SARAH FROST is an old standby of the south and is included on the list of the more hardy as is Rev. John Bennett, a semi-double bright rosy pink. Professor C. S. Sargent, a large full tight peony form. Jarvis Red, a loose double of rich dark red coloring.

Camellia shows listed in the south in the next few weeks are Columbia, S. C., February 15-16; Macon, Ga., February 18-19; Marshallville, Ga., February 22. (Marshallville is famed for its many camellias. They are planted along the highways leading to the town and some of the most famous collections of the South are in nearby gardens); Columbus, Ga., February 25-26; and Fayetteville, N. C., March 9-10. The Norfolk show will follow these dates. Visiting a camellia show is a rare horticultural treat and a valuable experience for anyone wishing to grow them, for like other enthusiasts in flower growing the camellia fan is willing to give full information on the secrets of his or her success.

Army Lensmen Travel Light on Brady Trail

versions of the same scenes, are reproduced on Page 1 of this section.

The little man whose arduous trail they followed has left historians and lovers of fine photography a priceless legacy. Not only have his photographs entranced by their artistic excellence the generations which followed him; they have enabled students of America's great conflict to see the war as it was seen by those who took part in it. No other war, until World War II, was so adequately photographed and no war, without exception, was so thoroughly photographed by one man and a couple of assistants.

Mathew B. Brady was born in Warren County, N. Y., about 1823; the exact date has been lost. By 1840 he was making daguerreotypes but by 1855 had switched to wet-plate photography. A man of imagination and irrepressible energy, he managed to photograph President Polk in 1847 and thereafter every President but one sat for him until his death in 1895.

Brady's feat in photographing a war practically single-handed is the more remarkable when one considers the equipment he used. In the Brady photo at left, one of his crews is taking a break in a woods behind the battle lines, with enough paraphernalia to stock a modern studio. Right, M/Sgt. Donald Wingfield with the equipment he used in retracing Brady's footsteps. The map accompanying this panel shows where the pictures on Page 1 were made

Sergeant Wingfield made the modern views of Brady's scenes with a camera compact and light enough to be held in the hand. All the equipment he needed to take into the field with him was carried in a small leather case slung over his shoulder.

In comparison with Brady's cumbersome process of coating his plates, exposing them at once and then developing them without loss of time, Wingfield carried a supply of highly sensitive film ready for exposure at any time and almost indefinitely preservable.

Because of the stability of his film, Wingfield needed no caravan to go along with him; his laboratory could remain at one central location and wait for the film to be brought in for developing. Furthermore, Wingfield's film could be enlarged many times without showing the grains of silver nitrate which would have made Brady's plates useless for enlargement.

Provide Good Cross Pollinator for Each Variety

Plant Apple Trees 30 Feet Apart

By Alfred Putz

AN APPLE is much more than just a good fruit tree. It provides cooling shade during the hot summer months, is ornamental, strong-growing and long-lived and produces a crop of choice fruit if it is properly pruned and sprayed. In May there is a display of large, fragrant flowers.

On a lot not less than 35 feet wide there is room for at least one apple tree. Where more than one is planted, space them 30 feet apart unless a dwarf form is chosen. It is relatively easy to maintain a respectable lawn under apple trees. Refrain from cutting the grass too short at any time and feed twice a year just as with any lawn.

Care in Selection

PERSONAL preferences for certain apple varieties are strong, but before the final decision is made check to make sure the selection is suited to the particular section. Another important point concerns pollenation. Most apples require another variety close by to bear heavy crops of fruit year after year. Not just any variety will do. There are specific pollenators, and scientists have worked out a schedule for all varieties.

Reciprocal or mutual pollenators, of which Red Rome Beauty and Jonathan are an example, offer the greatest advantage where only a few trees can be planted.

How to Plant

GOOD SOIL preparation pays well, and apples must never be planted in poorly drained soil. Dig a hole at least twice as deep and wide as the root system. Place a bucketful or two of rotted manure or a mixture of equal parts peat moss, dried cow manure and good topsoil in the bottom below the reach of the roots at planting time.

After that a helper comes in handy. Let him hold the tree in its correct position while you work good topsoil or compost soil around, between and above the roots after they have been arranged in their natural position.

Roots which have been damaged are cut back to eliminate the injured part. A piece of lath or a stick placed over the planting hole at the soil level will be needed to get the plant in the center of the hole and at the right depth, which is an inch deeper than it stood in the nursery. You can tell this from the color of the bark. Without this help there is no telling where the plant will stand until planting is completed.

Firm Planting Soil

WHEN the topmost roots have been covered solidly about two inches deep, firm the soil with the soles of the shoes. Keep firming as more soil is added, because firm planting is very important. Leave a depression about an inch deep to permit soaking well after planting.

When satisfied that the water has reached the bottom of the planting hole, fill the depression with peat moss or leaf mold to serve as a mulch. Unless there is at least an inch of rain a week, water the plants well to make up the shortage throughout the first growing season.

If the tree is planted for shade, first pruning efforts must be directed toward establishing a main trunk not less than 6 feet tall; 7 or 8 feet may be even better. But don't cut off all the side branches at one time. That would seriously affect the growth balance.

Ponder Beats Citation; Coaltown Loses

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom It May Concern:

The man who threw John L. Lewis for a loss the other day was "Bullet" Keech, first-string fullback on the Business High School team of 1913, who as Federal District Judge Richmond B. Keech issued the injunction under the Taft-Hartley Act . . . the reserve fullbacks on that school team were Walter Haight, The Washington Post racing writer, and another lad who achieved some local fame in later life as a stick man at Jimmie LaFontaine's . . . the Redskins have asked Secretary of the Army Gordon Gray, who soon will take over as president of North Carolina U., to intercede and persuade Charlie Justice to accept a pro football contract . . . but the initial salary of $10,000 they are preparing to offer Justice will go completely unheeded . . . Eddie Robinson, the Nats' only power hitter, will not benefit by the installation of bullpens in center field at Griffith Stadium. Robinson, strictly, a pull hitter, rarely bangs a ball in that direction . . . but for such long fly ball hitters as Ted Williams and Joe Di Maggio, the remodeling holds the prospect of more homers . . . if too many visiting players benefit, Clark Griffith will get the bullpens out of there and back in foul territory where they always were . . . Joe Labate of the Phillies describes baseball scouts as "undertakers in reverse." He says "the undertakers bury the stiffs, and the baseball scouts dig 'em up."

POVICH

BESIDES being the most staunchly Republican State in the Union, Maine has another distinction. It's the only State of the 48 that doesn't boast at least one thoroughbred horse breeding farm . . . there were more horse races (26,935) in the United States last year than there were race horses (21,626) . . . Charlie Titone, who fights Filberto Osario at Turner's Arena tomorrow night, is rated by Ring Magazine as the featherweight most likely to dethrone Willie Pep. The 22-year-old Titone is one of those rarities of the ring, a fancy boxer who suddenly discovered he could hit hard, and turned puncher . . . win, lose or draw, Titone unfailingly phones his mother in Brooklyn immediately after each fight, and usually it's with good news. He's lost only five of 39 bouts . . . The Nats are still trying to peddle Ray Scarborough in a deal for one of the White Sox pitchers, Randy Gumpert, Bob Kuzava or Bill Wight . . . Marlene Bauer, the 15-year-old doll baby who is the hottest article on the women's golf circuit, will soon turn pro to help her middle-class family capitalize on her growing fame. She will command bigger exhibition fees than any woman golfer in history, including Babe Didrikson Zaharias . . . her next Washington appearance will be in the National Celebrities Tournament, to be sponsored by The Washington Post on June 3-4.

HAL NEWHOUSER, an 18-game winner, signed his 1950 Detroit contract that calls for a salary of $50,000, which recalls that Walter Johnson was a holdout with the Nats in 1913 because he was offered only $7500 after winning 24 games. Johnson was demanding $9000, "as much as Ty Cobb is getting." . . . The $6000 the Caps received in the trade of Jack Nichols will wipe out some of the deficit on Mike Uline's 1949-1950 basketball operation . . . Babe Ruth's "calling his shot" homer against the Cubs in the 1932 World Series, which was voted the No. 2 sports thrill of the half-century, finds Cub Catcher Gabby Hartnett dissenting. Hartnett says Ruth wasn't calling his shot against Pitcher Charley Root, but was merely gesturing toward his hecklers on the Cub's bench. That differs with the story of Bill Dickey who declares Ruth was waving an accusing finger at Root who had quick-pitched him on the previous delivery, and wasn't calling his home-run shot at all. . . . I thought the Tunney-Dempsey "long count" episode at Chicago rated No. 2 in the list of thrills. The Yanks were sweeping to a four-straight victory over the Cubs, anyway, in that 1932 World Series . . . The Cincinnati Reds, the first team to pay salaries to ball players, now qualify for another first—a bona fide alumni association of former players who wore Cincinnati uniforms. The Reds were also the first team to play night baseball (1935), the first to fly in airplanes (1935), the first team to play a doubleheader (1876), the first to have two brothers in the line-up (1869) and the first to own a player who wore glasses (1878).

BILLY EVANS, general manager of the Detroit Tigers, who turned down the Trout-for-Calvert deal with the Nats philosophized, "sometimes the best deals are those that you don't make." . . . Jimmy Braddock is counseling Joe Louis to stay in retirement against his own interests. Braddock still gets a percentage of Louis' purses as champion in return for giving him the shot at the title in 1937 when Max Schmeling was the logical contender after knocking out Louis . . . Buddy Lester, tops among the comedians and soon due to be a feature on the Arthur Godfrey show, is a frustrated sports writer who succumbed to show business after studying journalism . . . The $15,000 National Capital open golf tournament is going begging for lack of a sponsor and the event will be lost to Washington unless somebody willing to gamble on the gate receipts comes up with the scratch. Darrell Hevenor Smith, sr. (Penn, 1911), chides the Associated Press for its account of Jim Thorpe's exploits in which reference was made to the Carlisle Indians' "upset triumph over mighty Penn in 1908." The game was a 6-6 tie, Smith submits, and Thorpe was outshone by other members of the Indian backfield . . . Outfielder Ed Stewart is entitled to ask what a guy has to do to make good with the Nats. In 1948 he was their top hitter, yet he was benched by Joe Kuhel at the start of the 1949 season. Last year Stewart was the best outfielder on the club, yet Bucky Harris says the Nats will probably open their season with a Sam Mele-Irv Noren-Gill Coan outfield.

Stablemate Tops Champ By Length at Santa Anita

Arcadia, Calif., Feb. 11 (AP).—The one-two punch of the feared Calumet racing stable struck again today, but it was Ponder first and Citation second in the $50,000 San Antonio Handicap.

As 51,000 turf fans broke loose in a swelling roar of excitement, Ponder, the 1949 Kentucky Derby winner, came under the wire one length ahead of the mighty Citation and thus, for the time being, again put the damper on the latter's comeback hopes.

It was the first time that Citation has ever been beaten in two successive races. He lost to Miche in a tune-up two weeks ago.

Charles S. Howard's Irish beauty, Noor, once wooed by the fabulous Aga Khan, came in third as nine horses set off in this last major engagement pointing toward the $100,000 Santa Anita Handicap two weeks away.

The heavily backed Calumet entry got down to business in the latter phases of the race, with Citation making the first move and Ponder coming from behind with a surge of power that even his famous stablemate couldn't hold.

It was a sweet victory for Ponder, recent winner of the $100,000 Santa Anita Maturity.

Brooks in Saddle

But it was even sweeter for Jockey Steve Brooks. Brooks had lost the riding assignment on Citation after that horse bowed to Miche. Today he sailed past Citation, which had Eddie Arcaro aboard.

It was a formful finish, as well as a tight one, with the Calumets paying the favorites' price of $2.90, $2.80 and $2.30, and Noor, the public's second choice, $3.50.

Time for the winner was 1:50 1/5.

This was Citation's first stake engagement since he hurt a leg 14 months ago, and this was his first run at a distance since he inaugurated his comeback here last month.

$37,800 To Ponder

But it was Ponder who flashed in for top honors and the $37,800 first money that boosted his earnings during his career to $442,725.

Citation's second netted him $10,000, and boosted his lifetime earnings to $879,200. But it probably cost him the chance of hitting the million-dollar mark at the meeting here even if he wins the $100,000 handicap February 25. He can, however, pass Stymie's all-time record now standing at $918,485.

Brooks was jubilant.

"When I asked Ponder to come on from the far turn," said the jockey, "he came. He's a great stretch runner. He's going to be tough to beat in the big handicap."

Of Citation, Arcaro said: "It was asking a good deal to have him tackle such a tough field after

THREE RINGS WINNING McLENNAN HANDICAP AT HIALEAH, ROYAL GOVERNOR SECOND AND COALTOWN THIRD

Three Rings Wins by 2, With Royal Governor 2d

Miami, Fla., Feb. 11 (AP).—Three Rings, Mrs. E. L. Hopkins' 5-year-old gelding, survived a bitter stretch duel today to win Hialeah's $25,000-added McLennan Handicap by a length.

Mrs. E. du Pont Weir's Royal Governor, shipped here from South Carolina for the McLennan, beat out Calumet Farm's mighty Coaltown by a length for second place. Addison Stable's Arise was fourth.

Armed, Calumet's 9-year-old "Golden Gelding" placed sixth in the field of 11.

The gelded son of Blue Larkspur-Circus King, ably piloted by Jockey Headley Woodhouse, assumed a half-length lead at the half-mile post and, though pressed, held on to finish a full length in front of the high class field.

Time Over Record

Three Rings' time of 1:50 1/5 for the mile and a furlong test was more than two full seconds off the world equalling 1:47 3/5 run by Coaltown Feoruary 14, 1949.

Coaltown's lack of showing was attributed mostly to the 132-pound impost—eight more pounds than he carried last year when he won the McLennan and 15 more than the winner of today's card. It also marked his first competitive appearance since his defeat by Capot in the Pimlico Special last fall.

Doug Dodson, jockey aboard Arise, claimed a foul against Royal Governor but it was not allowed.

The largest crowd thus far this season, 23,366, turned out for the fifteenth renewal of the race named in honor of the late Joseph McLennan.

Winner Pays $11.50

Three Rings picked up $24,300 in added first money and rewarded $2 backers $11.50, $5.80 and $2.90 across the board. Royal Governor, who arrived from Aiken, S. C., this week and will be entered in the $50,000-added Widener Handicap, paid $14.70 and $4.50. Coaltown, who with stablemate Armed made up the Warren Wright entry, paid the favorite's price of $2.30 for show tickets.

Trained by former jockey Willie Knapp—the rider who rode Upset for the great Man O' War's only defeat — Three Rings won five major handicap races last year and earlier this season defeated Armed in the Royal Palm Handicap.

Both Won Handicaps

Both Coaltown and Armed have won the McLennan. Armed, now 9 years old, triumphed in the Fixture in 1947 under 130 pounds. This year he carried 112 pounds.

Last year Coaltown won in the sizzling time of 1:48 2/5 under 124 pounds—six less than the top impost of 132 pounds he carried this year.

Royal Governor received $5000, Coaltown $2500 and Arise $1250.

The order of finish after the money horses was Bug Juice, Armed, Sun Herod, First Nighter, Ol' Skipper, Brick and Loser Weeper.

Caps Rack Up Anderson Easily, 81-69

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

After making what appeared to be a serious attempt to tie their all-time consecutive loss record, the Caps last night did a smart about-face, pulling away to an easy 81-69 victory over the Anderson Packers.

Stellar play by two comparatively little men—Chick Reiser and Freddie Scolari—enabled the locals to snap their losing streak at five.

The two veterans took the play away from the newest Cap, 7-foot Don Otten, who came here from Tri-City for popular Jack Nichols.

Otten, looking cumbersome, missed his first five field goal attempts and was booed roundly when he went out in the second period.

The forgiving faithful — only 1421 of whom were on hand — cheered him just as loudly when he left the game in the middle of the third period after contributing nine points toward Washington's 47-40 lead.

The Caps hadn't lost six in a row since an ill-fated stretch in the 1947-48 campaign. They started out as though they would last night.

Anderson grabbed a 13-3 lead while the locals went without a field goal for 8.20 of the first period. The second-place Western Division club had a 17-9 advantage going into the second period and quickly upped it to 21-9.

Then the Caps, with 34-year-old Reiser supplying the spark, got on the move. Chick scored eight quick points in the second period, starting and finishing a seven-point flurry that tied the game at half, 33-all.

Arizin Gets 33 Points

Colonials Win in 2 Overtimes, 62-55; Villanova Romps, 73-45

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

George Washington U. won a thrilling 60-55 victory over Duke in the second overtime period after Villanova routed Georgetown, 73-45, in the season's last collegiate double-header at the Armory last night.

Arizin's Total Sets Armory Mark

Paul Arizin of Villanova treated 4639 fans to one of the grandest performances in the three-year basketball history of the National Guard Armory.

The 6-foot 3-inch Philadelphian scored 33 points as the Wildcats mauled Georgetown, 73-45.

No records have been kept, but Arizin was unofficially credited with the collegiate scoring record for the big barn.

He scored 25 points in the first half, but showed remarkable restraint in the second, passing off to his teammates, who added onto a 46-24 halftime lead.

Four different Hoyas, John Mazziota, John Norris, Tony Durmowicz and Dan Supkis in turn tried their hands at guarding Arizin, but they couldn't stop him. Mazziota and Durmowicz fouled out for their efforts.

Arizin worked in the pivot slot. From the outside, he was deadly, and wound up with 11 field goals in 20 attempts. From the free-throw line, he made 11 out of 14.

The Hoyas were never in contention after the first four minutes, when they trailed, 7-5.

Arizin, with terrific spring in his legs, looked like a 7-footer, outjumping 6-foot 5-inch Mazziota for the rebounds.

Little Leo Wolf did an almost airtight guarding job on Tommy O'Keefe, who usually leads Georgetown's point-getters.

Villanova enjoyed scoring streaks of 9, 7 and 7 points, and took its 22 point lead into the second half.

Georgetown made a brief flurry in the first four minutes of the second half, and cut its deficit to 49-33. But Arizin, Joe Hannan and

Moffatt's Layup Breaks Deadlock

In the second game of the doubleheader, which was anything but anticlimatic, George Washington wore down Duke, 62-55, in double-overtime.

The Colonials had to come from behind to tie the score at 49-all in regulation time, and they had to catch up again at 53-all to force a second overtime.

Blond Johnny Moffatt, a McKinley Tech product got the Colonials off right in the second five-minute extra period with a driving layup, and the Blue Devils couldn't catch up.

G. W. froze the ball for three minutes, and then Artie Cerra plopped in a layup and two free throws, and Moffatt came back with a set shot in the last second. That offset a pair of meaningless Duke free throws, and the Colonials took over third place from Duke in the Southern Conference.

It was Duke's second loss in two nights around Washington. The Blue Devils lost to Maryland the night before, 67-57, and they skidded from the conference lead all the way down to fourth place. They now have an 8-3 record, compared to G. W.'s 11-3.

Artie Cerra, who played despite a bad cold and hot fever, was the high scorer for G. W. with 24 points. Coach Bill Reinhart took Cerra out for four three-minute rest periods, and Cerra played a fine game.

A thrilling second half which saw the score tied at 27, 33, 36, 38,

Kiki Cuyler Dies En Route To Hospital

Ann Arbor, Mich., Feb. 11 (AP).—Hazen (Kiki) Cuyler, baseball star for the Pittsburgh Pirates and Chicago Cubs, died of coronary thrombosis tonight in an ambulance that was bringing him to University hospital here.

Cuyler, 50, had been suffering from heart disease for some time and was traveling from his home in Harrisville, Mich., upon a physician's advice after becoming worse last night.

An outfielder and power hitter throughout his baseball career, Cuyler broke into the pro game with Bay City of the old Michigan-Ontario league when he was 20 years old.

After a stint with Bay City, Charleston of the South Atlantic League and Nashville of the Southern Association, Kiki went to Pittsburgh in 1923 and had four great seasons with the Pirates.

The Cubs bought his services in 1927 and he spent seven seasons with them. Later he played for the Cincinnati Reds and Brooklyn Dodgers.

Cuyler's lifetime major league batting average was .321. In three World Series he compiled a .281 hitting mark.

Retiring as a player, he managed Chattanooga and Atlanta in the Southern Association and coached the Cubs. Recently he went to the Boston Red Sox as a coach to join his old Chicago manager, Joe McCarthy.

Early this year Cuyler was stricken ill and spent several weeks in Alpena (Mich.) General Hospital.

[Editor's Note:—Cuyler will be remembered by Washington fans of yesteryear as a member of the 1925 World Champion Pittsburgh Pirates. He supplied some of the punch that cost the Washington club the title it had gained by whipping the New York Giants the year before.

[In the 1925 series, which went the full seven games, Cuyler hit .269, far below his regular season average of .357. He had 7 hits in 26 times at bat which included three doubles and a homer. He batted in four runs and scored three himself.]

Knicks Beat Stags, 85 to 75

New York, Feb. 11 (AP). — The New York Knickerbockers, losers in six of their previous eight starts, snapped back at Madison Square Garden today to defeat the Chicago Stags 85-75 in a National Basketball Association game before a crowd of 6500.

The Knicks enjoyed margins of 21-17 at the first quarter buzzer, 46-40 at the half, and 66-58 at the third quarter before going on to win by 10.

Cronin, Trumper Score KO's As Catholic U. Blanks CCNY

By Jules Loh

Catholic University opened its boxing season last night winning every bout on the card for an 8-0 victory over City College of New York before 2000 fans at the Brookland gym.

Cardinal Captain Tommy Cronin, 115-pound eastern intercollegiate champ, started the action when he stopped CCNY's team captain, Roger Dorian after a minute and a half of the third round.

Catholic's only other knockout came in the 145-pound class when Dick Trumper decked Marvin Zentner after 1:45 of the second round.

Catholic's new heavyweight hope, Charley York, came through in his first appearance in a college ring with a close decision over CCNY's Negro fighter, Fred Watts.

It was the narrowest victory of the night for the Cardinals, with the points reading 29-28 in York's favor.

York took the first round by a close decision, but dropped the second to his heavier and more experienced adversary.

In the final round York connected with enough punches to get the decision.

Catholic's 165-pound star, Billy Maher, won his ninth straight bout in decisioning Herb Johnson.

A new intercollegiate rule was put into effect last night. The rule, suggested by CU Coach Eddie LaFond, is that the result of a round be announced to the respective coaches after each bell.

1000 New Box Seats

Nats Shorten Left Field by 19 Feet

Remodeling Will Increase Capacity To Over 30,000

By Shirley Povich
Post Reporter

Griffith Stadium's outfield distances, the woe of American League power hitters for fifty years, will be radically shortened 19 feet, before the start of the 1950 season.

In a move to invite more home runs off the bats of right-handed hitters, the Washington Club yesterday announced its plan to install six rows of box seats, numbering 1000, in front of the bleacher wall in left and left center fields.

The 405-foot distance down the left-field foul line which has been annually defying the home run hitters, will be reduced to 386 feet. The new seats, which will extend almost into dead center, will curtail the former 391-foot distance to left-center to a 372-foot poke.

The remodeling will not reduce Griffith Stadium to a home run hitter's paradise, and it will still remain as the toughest park in the league for right-handed hitters, but that it will up the homer output is obvious.

Clark Griffith, president of the team, declared his purpose in installing the seats was two-fold, (1) to give the fans the excitement of more home runs and (2) increase his park capacity to 30,600. The new seats will sell for the $2 box seat price and will be constructed of lightweight tubular steel.

Griffith admitted he is risking the result that right-handed hitters of visiting clubs may gain the greatest advantage from the curbed distances, and he is prepared to yank out the seats and restore the old limits if that proves true.

This latest development follows closely on the Washington club's announcement that the pitchers' bullpens, formerly in foul territory, would be moved into centerfield, adjacent to both sides of the flagpole in dead center. Seventy feet long, the bullpens shorten the distances in those directions by 14 feet.

Because of the locations of the bullpens in the deepest sectors of the outfield, they are not expected to produce any cheap homers. "I doubt if five balls a year will be hit into the bullpens," said Edward B. Eynon, jr., club secretary.

A three-foot retaining wall will be built in front of the new seats in left and left center and any hit clearing that barrier will be labeled a home run. The new seat extend to within 22 feet of the visiting bullpen in left center but the intervening territory will be walled off.

Hits bouncing over the shallow wall will be called two-baggers under the new ground rules.

A 15-foot cinder path will be built in front of the walls to warn outfielders of the proximity of the fences. That is a new, official decree by American League President Will Harridge.

So consistently have the left field fences defied the lustiest swings of the league hitters that rarely have more than a half dozen homers sailed into that territory in any year. During one season in the early '40s, only

Griff Makes Move To Give Fans More Excitement

Rudy York and Eddie Lake of the Tigers were able to clout homers into left field.

Griffith's fear that the new limitations may give right-handed swingers of visiting clubs a lopsided advantage of the Washington hitters may be well founded.

On the Washington team, the new fences are expected to encourage more homers from the bats of such as Eddie Yost, Sam Mele and Clyde Volmer, with perhaps Al Evans also benefitting. On the other clubs, by contrast, the line-up of right-handed hitters looms formidable.

With the Yankees, such as Joe DiMaggio, Billy Johnson, Hank Bauer and even Phil Rizzuto will be shooting for the new fences with a high expectancy.

Marlene Bauer Beats Sister for Title, 5 and 4

Record Gallery of 4000 Watch

Palm Beach, Fla., Feb. 11 (AP).—Kid sister Marlene Bauer, 15, trounced big sister Alice, 22, of Midland, Tex., 5 and 4 n the finals of the Palm Beach Woman's Golf Championship today.

The family finish brought out a gallery of 4000, biggest in the 40-year-old history of the tournament. They were treated to good golf and the eye-filling players made up for occasional rough going.

Marlene sliced into the trees with her first shot. Alice took the hole with four strokes. But Alice overdrove the second green and Marlene was in with a birdie 2.

On the third Marlene banged into a trap, while Alice chipped on and required only a 4-foot putt to take the hole.

Alice developed trap trouble on the fifth. She was back in traps on the sixth, seventh and eleventh holes. Marlene drove into a trap on the ninth, but the hole was halved.

The match ended on the fourteenth as Alice's putt rimmed the cup and Marlene sank a 6-footer.

Navy Pierces Penn State's Zone, 46-40

Annapolis, Md., Feb. 11 (AP).—Navy drove enough holes in Penn State's zone-defense wall to gain its eleventh basketball victory of the season today, 46-40.

Forced to shoot from outside or wait patiently for chances to cut toward the backboard, the Middies were held to their lowest winning score in 16 contests.

Joe Fitzpatrick again used his overhead set shots to lead Navy's attack, scoring seven goals for 14 points.

Although they fell 14 points behind on two occasions Penn States dribblers outscored the Midshipmen in the second half.

Skyscraping Marty Costa hit the basket on five shots from the floor and three from the foul stripe for 13 points, tops for Penn State. The loss was the second in two days for the Lions and their seventh in 16 games.

Southern Conference Fails to Name 'Czar'

Lynchburg, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—The Southern Conference failed today in its efforts to fill its newly created $12,000 post of commissioner.

After three written ballots, the conference voted to delay action on the apointment of a commissioner until a special meeting or the next annual meeting in December, 1950.

After the first ballot the list of candidates was narrowed down to two persons — Wallace Wade, Duke University football coach, and Richard A. Smith, athletic director at Washington and Lee.

Wade and Smith received the most votes on the initial ballot, which also included the names of Charley Jamerson, athletic director at Davidson, and Judge H. Lester Hooker, a member of the Virginia State Corporation Commission.

Jamerson and Hooker were eliminated on the initial ballot on recommendation of Dr. Charlie Jordan of Duke. This resulted in the drawing of lines between the Wade and anti-Wade factions, observers said.

The conference failed to name its man for the $12,000 per year job because of a ruling requiring a candidate to receive the vote of two-thirds of the present 16 members.

Both Wade and Smith have been connected with the conference since its founding. Their names will again be presented to the membership by a special committee which has spent the past few weeks screening 15 or 16 applicants and others recommended for the position.

Since some members apparently want an outsider as commissioner, the committee also will submit the names of Gus Tebell, basketball and baseball coach at the University of Virginia, and O. O. (Scrappy) Kessing, former commissioner of the old All-American football conference.

Thorpe Tops Ruth As Greatest Athlete

By Gayle Talbot

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Jim Thorpe, that almost legendary figure in the sports world, had additional laurels heaped upon his leathern brow today when the Nation's sports experts named him the greatest male athlete of the half century.

Previously voted the No. 1 football player of the past 50 years, the wonderful Sac and Fox became the only double winner in the Associated Press poll when 252 out of 393 sports writers and radio broadcasters accorded him the ultimate honor.

THORPE

"Old Jim," greatest track and field athlete of his day and, later, a good enough baseball player to draw big league pay for six years, finished far ahead of Babe Ruth, the runner-up. Ruth, earlier chosen top baseball star of the era, drew 86 first-place votes.

Still another hero of the national roll, Jack Dempsey, who was named the greatest prize-fighter, placed third with 19 votes. Ty Cobb, runner-up to Ruth in the baseball pool, finished with 11 firsts.

The voters were asked to name their first, second and third choices for the supreme athlete of them all. Points were compiled on a 3-2-1 basis. Thorpe's point total came to 875, Ruth's 539, Dempsey's 246 and Cobb's 148. The storied Indian lapped them going and coming.

Bobby Jones, winner of the 50-year golfing poll, placed fifth with 88 points, while Joe Louis, second only to Dempsey in the fighter category, ran sixth with 73.

Of the other individual poll winners, Jesse Owens, track, placed eighth with 54 points, and Bill Tilden, tennis, fifteenth with 9.

The speed, the great strength and the intuitive skill of the phenom from Carlisle Institute have become part of the Nation's sports lore.

In naming him greatest athlete, the experts probably expressed about equal admiration for his tremendous ability in football and track and field in the years 1911-12. That "Old Jim," as he always has referred to himself, continued to play professional football and baseball for another 16 years only cemented his claim to immortality.

It was in 1911 and 1912 that he stood the college football world on its ears, many times almost single-handed carrying little Carlisle to to astonishing victories over Army, Harvard and other ruling powers.

Almost without exception, those who watched Thorpe run and batter and kick opposing teams into submission swear that the game has never yet seen his equal. The fact that he later dominated pro football for so long seems to bear out this estimate.

It is even more certain that he was the world's greatest track and field performer in 1912, the year he won both the 10-event decathlon and the five-event penathlon at the Olympic games in Stockholm.

With little formal coaching as it is known today and facing the best athletes in the world, Jim won every event in the penathlon except the javelin throw. He scored outright victories in four events of the decathlon and finished not worse than fourth in the other six.

His marks in most of the events were not remarkable by modern standards, but at the time they were of such a uniform excellence that no other competitor could keep Thorpe in sight. Jim, from contemporary accounts, did not even stretch himself, never being a man to take unnecessary exertion.

For instance, his time in the 100 meters of the decathlon was 11.2, yet his old coach, Glenn Warner, was said to have clocked Thorpe at 9.8 for 100 yards.

As perhaps an even better illustration of Thorpe's head-and-shoulder superiority over the other all-around athletes of his time, it was not considered unusual for him to capture seven or eight firsts in dual meets between Carlisle and such pillars of the day as Harvard, Penn State and Lafayette.

ONE OF SPORT'S saddest chapters was written when, in 1913, the American Olympic Committee discovered that Thorpe had played a jag of professional baseball down South prior to the Olympic games. He was stripped of his medals and silverware and his Olympic records were expunged from the book.

Jim always said he hadn't realized he was breaking the amateur rules by playing pro ball.

Several major league clubs, having heard of Thorpe's ability as an outfielder and pitcher, entered vigorous bidding for his services, and the New York Giants finally paid him a reported $5000 to sign. It did not prove a happy choice on Thorpe's part.

Manager John McGraw, it seems, did not like "college boys" very much to begin with, and "Old Jim" soon worsened matters by crippling up one of McGraw's most valued pitchers, Jeff Tessreau, in a friendly wrestling match.

Thereafter Thorpe was under explicit orders not to touch a Giant teammate in play, and he always complained that McGraw never gave him a real chance to become a regular in the outfield. The legend is that Jim couldn't hit a curve, but Thorpe denies it.

"I hit .337 my last year in the National League," he observes. "I must have hit a few curves."

That was the best lot of hitting Thorpe did in the six seasons he remained in the big time, with the Giants, Cincinnati and finally with the Boston Braves. Mostly he had difficulty getting his average above .250.

LATER, IN the highest minors, the International League and American Association, the big Indian walloped the ball at around .350, and that while he continued to play rugged professional football in the off-season. He wound up his diamond career with Akron, Ohio, in 1928 at the age of 40.

One of the most graphic tales of the Indian's enormous strength is told—still with a pained expression—by a New York baseball writer who was with the Giants in San Antonio, Tex., one spring. He was standing he recalls, loking in the showcase of a famous curio store.

"Next thing I knew," he says, "I was inside the showcase, glass was all over the joint and my back was broken between the shoulder blades. Jim had seen me and had come over to say hello with a pat on the back."

NEW YORK, FEB. 11 (NYHT).—A fellow said, "Suppose you were a pitcher who won 17 games in less than a complete season, started the opening game of the World Series and had been chosen rookie of the year. You read about other players getting salaries anywhere between $30,000 and $125,000, and you hear owners fighting for a chance to hand over $100,000 to a kid who's never thrown a ball in a professional game.

"Suppose you're this guy, and you go in to sign your contract and they tell you you're going to get $13,000, give or take a thousand. How would you feel about it?"

Smith

"You're thinking of Don Newcombe, of course," another fellow said. "Well, baseball economies has gotten away from me. My standards are no good these days. I'm old-fashioned enough to think that $13,000 is a lot of money for a young fellow starting his first full season in the majors. The trouble with me is I remember a time when a kid started in Class D at $60, hoping he'd be good enough and lucky enough to get up to $13,000 at the peak of his career.

"In those days, a sort of standard goal of young ballplayers was a 10-year hitch in the big league at an average of $10,000. Out of that $100,000 a guy figures to save enough to open the best pool hall in town when he was washed up."

"But," the first man argued, "money isn't what it used to be, and this fellow was "rookie of the year."

"Look at it this way," the other said, "the chances are Newcombe came up to the Dodgers at the established minimum of $5000. On top of that he got a World Series cut and a reputation that has been worth at least a little money to him this winer. Besides, I wouldn't be surprised if Branch Rickey gave him a present after the season."

"The Dodgers helped buy him a house."

"Well, there you are. Even by today's standards, he didn't do so badly. He's a cinch to collect more than his contract calls for this year, because the Dodgers have to get second or third money even if they don't win the pennant. I've still got to believe that an increase of 160 percent in the basic wage is a pretty good raise for a rookie."

"BUT NEWCOMBE may be the best pitcher in baseball," the first fellow said. "He was the biggest winner on the club, even though he wasn't with the Dodgers at the start of the season. It seems to me the best man should get the best money."

"He's almost certainly the best pitcher in baseball," the second agreed, "but that argument about the best commanding the most money, it doesn't work that way, not in baseball or in other businesses. Good service over a period of years still counts something."

How about a fellow like Johnny Sain?" a third man said. "How many games does he win? Twenty, 21, 24—65 in three years. He can look down the bench and see a rookie who got something like $75,000 for signing, and I'll bet that alongside Sain's contract, Newcombe's wouldn't look so small, considering service given."

"Young players reach the upper brackets so much faster now than they used to," another said, "and once they get up there they won't take a cut. How about that skit Strangler Epstein did about Bob Feller in the writers' show? He had Feller getting $15,000 for winning 27 games, $25,000 for winning 25 games, $50,000 for winning 20 and so on, until he finally wants $200,000 this year because he doesn't figure to win more than 12.

"THAT'S NOT AS far-fetched as it sounds. Suppose Ted Williams actualy is getting $125,000 this year, although that's just a newspaper estimate. Suppose he has a terrible year, which can happen to anybody any time. He could play only $5000 worth of baseball this summer, and you know how much the Red Sox would be allowed to cut him? Under the rules, they'd still have to pay him $93,750 next year."

"I often wonder," a fellow said, "what guys like Frank Frisch think when they read about the salaries being paid to the Jackie Robinsons and Phil Rizzutos and George Kells. If I'm not mistaken, Frisch's top pay as a manager was $22,500, although he may have done better as a playing manager.

"Why, Buddy Kerr shot right up to $22,000 with the Giants. And this is no knock on Buddy, but you don't mention players like him in the same breath with Frisch."

"You don't mention fellows like Newcombe in the same breath with Dizzy Dean," another said. "Not yet, you don't, and maybe you never will, but when Diz had advanced to the point where Newcombe is now, he was getting one dollar a day, cash."

"Newcombe has passed Dean in one respect already," a man said. "I see where he had announced his correct age as 23, not 25. Diz used to get younger every season, too, but his age dropped only a year at a time."

Sam's 202 Leaves Him 3 Strokes Back

San Antonio, Tex., Feb. 11 (AP).—Tall Fred Haas, jr., the New Orleans thin man, clung to a two-stroke lead as the $10,000 Texas Open swung through its third round today.

Coming in last, Haas laid down a five-under-par 66 to make his total for 54 holes 199.

Even a competitive course record by Slammin' Sammy Snead, the drawling Virginian, wasn't enough to kick the dogged Haas off the top rung.

Coming from six strokes back, the Slammer turned in a round of 63—eight under-par over Brackenridge Park's 6400 yards—that brought him a total of 202.

The Slammer had only 29 putts today with eight one-putt greens. He three-putted No. 17 from 40 feet away. But generally the ball was falling right in the alley for Sambo. His best putt was a 20-footer on No. 1. He used only 10 putts going out on the first nine.

Demaret Has 66

But Snead didn't make the runner-up spot even, with that outburst of sensational golf.

Moving into second place was smiling Jimmie Demaret of Ojai, Calif., who shot a 66 and brought his total to 201.

A gallery of 6000 followed the grim-faced Snead as he plodded along with the music of the birdies in his ears falling even to wipe away the somber look. He hit a spectator on No. 16 and was able to get only a par there or he would have done away with the course record set in 1939 by Harold (Jug) McSpaden and tied in 1948 by Demaret and Dick Metz.

Metz had a 69 today and has a total for 54 holes of 206.

Cary Middlecoff, the National Open champion, shot a 64 to move into fourth place a stroke back of Snead. Middlecoff, the Ormond Beach, Fla., star, turned in a 29 on the back nine to tie a record made by many in the 23 years the Texas Open has been held.

A stroke behind Middlecoff was George Fazio of Conshohocken, Pa., who had a 66 today.

Fred Hawkins of El Paso, Tex., with a 69 and Metz deadlocked for sixth place.

It was another par-shattering day, despite the fact that there was a misting rain much of the time.

Exactly 30 of the 67 players, who started the third round, bettered regulation figures of 36, 35—71.

The final 18 holes will be played tomorrow with $2000 first-prize money and $1400 for second.

distances certainly will fascinate their coterie of right-handed swingers, Vern Stephens, Bobby Doerr, Dom DiMaggio and Birdie Tebbetts.

The Athletics will have such as Sam Chapman, Eddie Joost, Bob Dillinger and Pete Suder aiming at the shorter distances.

The Cleveland Indians will be bringing in such as Lou Boudreau, Joe Gordon, Ken Keltner and Bob Kennedy as right-handed hitters who can swing for the fences. Detroit will wheel in Jerry Priddy, Hoot Evers, Johnny Groth, George Kell and Johnny Lipon to shoot for homers.

The right-handed power hitters of the Browns, Roy Sievers and Less Moss, will no doubt be intrigued, as will three of the White Sox, Gus Zernial, Cass Michaels and Switch-hitter Dave Philley.

The 1948 season record showed, typically, the obstacle formerly presented home run hitters by Griffith Stadium in relation to the other parks of the league. Only 35 homers were hit in Washington, despite the inviting distance of the 328-foot wall in right field. In Chicago there were 57, in Philadelphia 80, St. Louis 84, Detroit 100, Boston 103, Cleveland 117, and in Yankee Stadium 124.

he had been laid up for so long. There's no question he needed this race. He seemed to hang a little at the far turn, but I think his showing was most creditable."

As for Noor, Jockey Johnny Longden said his mount obviously didn't like the going, but: "Don't forget, he's still the horse to beat in the handicap."

The start of the race was good, with Abe Hirschberg's longshot Bolero jumping into the lead and setting the pace until the pack headed into the turn for home. Two California-bred candidates, On Trust and Solidarity, kept up a hot pursuit, with Citation hanging back around third or fourth and Ponder much farther back.

Citation began to roll at the five-eighth pole, however, and so did Ponder. Gradually, stride by stride, they wore down the Boleros. On Trusts and Solidarities, and then faced a new attack from Noor.

The stable probably wanted to win with Citation, but there wasn't time, and it was too risky to take a chance with Noor, which finished third in the 1948 Epsom Derby in England. Brooks gave all he had to Ponder and they swept in first, and then Citation flashed under the wire with Noor and Johnny Longden a close third, a half length back of Big C.

The order of finish behind the first three was Bolero, Mocopo, On Trust, Miche, Safe Arrival and Solidarity.

Jimmy Jones, trainer of the Calumet's Western division, was far from unhappy about the race. He said this was the roughest test given Citation in his comeback strategy.

It was, however, the fourth defeat in his career of 32 trips postward. He was beaten as 2-year-old by his stablemate, Bewitch, with Brooks riding; by Saggy in the Chesapeake Trial in 1948 with Arcaro aboard him for the first time; by Miche here with Brooks riding, and then today.

It Takes GW Two Overtimes

40 and 44, set the pace for the dramatic finish.

With five minutes left, Dave Scarborough, Duke playmaker, drove through for a layup to put his team ahead, 46-44. Thirty seconds later, Scotty York added a free throw to make it 47-44.

Scarborough then led Duke in a freeze, which G. W. could not penetrate for 3½ minutes. In his eagerness to get the ball, G. W.'s Ace Adler fouled Scarborough, but Dave missed both the shots, Cerra grabbing the second rebound.

As he broke away, Cerra was fouled and made both tries and cut the Colonial deficit to 47-46. Bud Goglin's layup after a pass from Cerra put G. W. ahead, with 57 seconds left

The armory was in an uproar when the irrepressible Scarborough tapped one in to put Duke ahead, 49-48, with 32 seconds left.

With 20 seconds left, and G. W. desperately trying to set up a scoring play, Duke's Dick Crowder fouled Phil McNiff. The crowd groaned when McNiff missed the first try, but he sent the game into overtime by dunking in his second.

It was McNiff who rescued G. W. again in the first overtime. After a tap-in by 6-foot, 6-inch Dayton Allen put Duke in front, 53-52, with a minute and a half to go, Cerra stole the ball from Scarborough, passed downcourt to McNiff, who was fouled by York.

With 55 seconds left McNiff missed his first free try, and made his second and it was 53-all going into the second extra period. After two misses by Duke's Ceep Youmans as the period started, Moffatt got the ball, put it through the hoop, and G. W. had the advantage it needed to pull through.

Fuchs Tops Indoor Shot Put Mark

New York, Feb. 11 (AP). — Big Jim Fuchs of Yale bettered the national indoor record for the shot put tonight when he heaved the iron ball 57 feet 7¾ inches in the New York A. C. games in Madison Square Garden.

Fuchs hit the distance with his first heave. It bettered the record of 56 feet 4½ inches set by the late Al Blozis in 1941.

Roscoe Browne, the Lincoln (Pa.) professor running for the New York Pioneer Club, blazed through with a finish kick to win the half mile run in 1:54.5. Robert Mealey of Cornell was second, and Jim Oberholtzer of Navy was third.

Fred Wilt of the New York Athletic Club opened his throttle with a lap to go and easily won the Toussaint two-mile run in 8:59.3.

The Illinois A. C.'s jumping parson, Bob Richard, won the pole vault but again the 15-foot mark eluded him. He cleared an even 14 feet. Bob Smith of San Diego State jumped second with 13-feet 6 inches. Richards made one try for 15 feet but quit after pulling a thigh muscle.

George Wade, the burly Yale runner, got off to a good start, led all the way and won the Baxter mile in 4:12.1.

Wilt had been running on even terms with Curt Stone of the Stranahan Catholic Club of Philadelphia, then burst forward. In just a little more than a lap he gained his winning margin of about 20 yards over second-place Stone. A crowd of 14,000 saw the Madison Square Garden race.

Horace Ashenfelter of the Penn A. C. ran third, and Viljo Heino of Finland fourth, far off the pace.

Hoya Quartet Again Sets 2-Mile Record

New York, Feb. 11.—Georgetown's two-mile relay team shattered a meet record for the second successive week, speeding to a 7.42 victory in the New York A. C. meet in Madison Square Garden tonight.

In turning back Syracuse, Penn and Army, Pat Lynch, Dave Boland, Dave Smith and Joe Deady lowered Fordham's 11-year-old standard, 7:44.6

Last week in the Boston Garden, the quartet set a 7:41.1 mark.

In the high hurdles, Georgetown's Bill Mitchell was third to Craig Dixon and Jim Gehrdes.

New Sports Wrinkle; Hockey Star Takes Mid-Season Vacation

Detroit, Feb. 11 (AP). — Ted Lindsay, high scorer of the National Hockey League and sparkplug of the Detroit Red Wings, was given an unprecedented mid-season vacation today.

Club officials said that Lindsay would play against the New York Rangers in New York tomorrow night. Then he will be flown to Hot Springs, Ark., for a week's rest. A Wings spokesman said "there is nothing physically wrong with Lindsay but we feel that a week's relaxation —completely away from hockey —will do him and the club some good in the stretch drive."

Mansfields Play Tune With Guns In Armory Show

The always fabulous Sportsmen's and Outdoors Show at the National Guard Armory is coming again, March 2-12, with more unique attractions. One, which the League of Maryland Sportsmen's public relations department points to with unconcealed pride, is the act known as the "Shooting Mansfields," composed of father, mother and daughter.

Not only do the Mansfields run the gamut of trick stuff usually seen in a sports extravaganza, but they ring the bell literally in popular acclaim by "giving with the music," via rifle shots.

Pop, Mon and Baby (she's no infant with a gun, bud) punch out tunes on musical bells by rapid-fire. They shot so fast as a team that they effect the same results as those Swiss bell ringers you used to see in vodvil away back. Musical trigger fingers, no less.

Frank Mansfield, a pint-sized veteran of Yukon game hunting, is the star of the act. Naturally, wife Marie and daughter Jean play the foils at one stage of the performance when they stand against the backdrop and allow Pop to fire away at their heads.

Arizin Scores 33 Points

Tom Sabol propelled Villanova on a six-point rally to a 55-35 lead.

O'Keefe rallied with eight points in the second half and wound up with 14 points to lead Georgetown.

Villanova's victory was its fifth straight, and seventienth against three losses. Georgetown's winning streak was snapped at four, and the Hoyas have a 10-6 record.

Phils Sign Twins

Philadelphia, Feb. 11 (AP).—The Philadelphia Phillies have signed what they believe is something new in baseball—twins.

Donald and Richard Truex of South Bend, Ind., were signed to a contract for the Vandergrift, Pa., Class C Middle Atlantic League farm of the Phils.

N. Y. High School Coaches End Strike

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Public high school sports coaches called off their week-old strike today.

Along with other special studies teachers, they voted to accept a compromise proposal in a dispute with the board of education over working hours.

The compromise is that the coaches, and teachers of subjects such as art and home economics, will go back to 30 teaching periods (a period is about 45 minutes) a week while a study of class work loads is made.

Coaches, who are health education teachers, struck last week to protest a recent increase to 3 periods a week.

Hart Signs for $15,000

Detroit, Feb. 11 (AP).—Notre Dame's great end Leon Hart signed a three-year pro football contract with the Detroit Lions today for a salary estimated at from $12,000 to $15,000 a season.

Head coach and general manager Bo McMillin said he planned to use Hart at end next season. There had been some reports the All-America star end would be switched to a fullback spot in the pro league.

"Wherever Mr. McMillin elects for me to play, that is the spot I want to win on the team," Hart said.

Andy Kerr Quits

Lebanon, Pa., Feb. 11 (AP).—Andy Kerr resigned as coach of Lebanon Valley College today to devote his full time to the annual East-West charity game.

He said the resignation meant an end to an active career as a college football mentor. Kerr's Lebanon Valley elevens won 15, lost 9 and tied 1 during his three years here. He came here in 1947 after 18 years as head coach at Colgate University, where he gained national prominence.

British Vet Wins Marathon; Runs 10 Miles Barefooted

Auckland, N. Z., Feb. 11 (AP). — Although he was forced to run the last 10 miles barefooted, Jack Holden, a 42-year-old English war veteran, won the marathon, feature event of the final day of the British Empire games.

It was one of the few major events that escaped the versatile, well-manned Australian team. The Australians cleaned up in track and field, swimming, rowing, cycling, wrestling and fencing.

All told the Aussies captured 34 first place medals compared to 19 for England, the third place nation. New Zealand, the host country, was second with 20 first placers. On a point basis, Australia finished far ahead, too.

Holden was handicapped when his shoes were cut to pieces 10 miles before the end of the 26-mile run.

Running barefoot didn't bother Holden as much as a stray Great Dane which started snapping at his legs about three miles from the finish line.

He won in 2 hours, 32 minutes, 57 seconds, about four minutes faster than runnerup S. Luyt of South Africa. J. Clark of New Zealand was third. Luyt was timed in 2:37:2.2.

Central Beats Eastern to Clinch Playoff Berth

Wilson Wins 82-60 to Set Scoring Mark

By West McLean
Post Reporter

Central's Vikings clinched an Interhigh Basketball League playoff berth and Wilson's Green Tigers established a team scoring mark for the season in a tripleheader before 2500 fans yesterday at Uline Arena. In the third game McKinley Tech defeated Chamberlain, 77-29.

Wilson's 82-60 triumph over Anacostia combined with Central's 48-44 victory over Eastern threw the race for the Southern Division championship into a three-way tie with Eastern, Wilson and Western all deadlocked for the top rung, with three wins and two losses each.

Central's win gives the Vikings a 5-won, 1-lost record and gives them at least a tie for the Northern Division crown.

Central, except for the opening minutes, was behind until the last 3½ minutes when Terry Gregory put the Vikings in a 40-40 tie with a push shot. Jack Stringer, who made seven of his eight free throws, gave Central a 41-40 edge seconds later on a foul goal.

Bill Merrelman's layup put Eastern back in front, 42-41, but Lou Glickfield's free throw put Central in a deadlock again.

Bob Hall's layup once more sent the Ramblers out in front, 44-42, but, as it turned out, that finished Eastern's scoring.

Franny Gleason's two free throws gave Central a 44-44 tie with one minute and 10 seconds left. Gregory and Sid Frank put in free throws and Glickfield added two more single-pointers and Central had its 48-44 triumph.

Gregory, with 16 points for Central, was the game's high scorer. John Ward had 13 for Eastern, nine of which came in the first period and gave the Ramblers a 32-20 first quarter advantage.

Wilson Ties for Lead

Wilson's victory pushed the Green Tigers into a three-way tie for the top spot in the Southern division with Eastern and Wilson. All three teams have won three games and lost two.

The Green Tigers, using only five men, established a new team scoring record for the season, breaking the 70-point mark set by McKinley Tech against Bell on January 27.

Jim Young, center, led the Wilson scoring parade with 23 points. Guard Pete Haley's nine points were the lowest for any Wilson player. Ronnie Brooks, with 22 points, and Barry Ryan, with 17, paced Anacostia.

In the third game, McKinley Tech made an all-out effort to match Wilson's record production, routing Chamberlain, 77-29.

Bill Breen, with 16 points, Snooky Kernan, 14, and Tony Sgro, 11, paced Tech to a victory that assures it of at least a tie for a playoff berth. Chamberlain's loss eliminated it from championship contention.

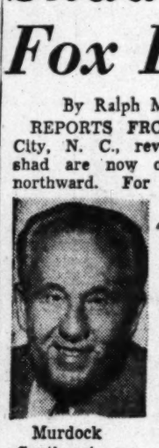
Shad Moving Northward; Fox Hunters Use Jeeps

By Ralph Murdock

REPORTS FROM Morehead City, N. C., reveal that the shad are now on the move northward. For several days shad and shad roe appeared on the menu at restaurants along the North Carolina coast. They are being taken in the sounds and tidal rivers from Roanoke to Southport.



Murdock

The shoaling up of Oregon Inlet in recent years, say the fishermen, is the cause for the shortage in the Stumpy Point and the Dare Coast Region, once the most famous shad-producing waters along the entire Atlantic coast.

One of the biggest fox hunts ever staged in eastern North Carolina gets under way on February 15. The big four-day hunt, with a pack of over 100 hounds, begins at Nags Head following a hunt breakfast at the Carolinian Hotel.

The hunt, getting to be an annual affair, is unique in that jeeps and not horses are used to follow the chase. Don't get excited. The hunters carry no guns and foxes killed, if any, will be victims of the dogs.

A few dead foxes would be welcomed by the populace of the area. The predatory animals have increased thereabouts to alarming numbers during the past few years.

Foxes at Nags Head are so numerous that they are becoming a threat to wildfowl, birds and small game. The high rabbit population has been reduced to a minimum as a result of the depredations by the foxes. Wildfowl fall victims to the animals when they come inshore to feed on the marshes.

HERE'S SOME fresh-water fishing news, fresh from the Maryland Game and Inland Fish Commission which announces that it has already completed a large part of its stocking of warm water fishes; namely 44,170, of which 32,754 were large and small mouth bass.

In addition to this, the commission is anticipating the stocking of 80,000 trout in the many suitable streams throughout Maryland. These releases will be made between now and Memorial Day.

Now for some Maryland 1950 fresh water fish laws. There are only a few changes from those of 1949. The first season to open will be for suckers, catfish, carp, eels, gudgeon, sunfish, fallfish, white perch and crappie. The season on these species will open February 15 and close November 30 with a few local exceptions such as Deep Creek Lake and Triadelphia Lake.

The next opening date will be for shad, herring and walleyes (Conowingo Lake and Susquehanna River, but not their tributaries), and will be March 15. The shad and herring season will close June 20. The walleye season closes November 15.

The open season for walleyes on the tributaries of the Susquehanna River and tributaries of the Conowingo Lake and other nontidal fresh waters is July 1 to November 15. The open season for rock or striped bass is June 1 to November 30, both dates inclusive.

The white perch season starts February 15, but the season on yellow perch does not open until July 1; both close on November 30.

The trout season opens on April 15 and bass fishing on July 1 (with a few exceptions on the latter species). More about the trout and bass season will appear in this column at a later date.

Titone Takes On Orsario At Turner's

Charlie Titone makes his sixth appearance at Turner's Arena when he meets Filberto Orsario in tomorrow night's feature 10-rounder.

Both featherweights hold victories over Washington-favorite Jimmy Cooper, but were beaten in return matches. Brooklynite Titone scored a three-round knockout over Danny Carabella in his most recent Turner's appearance last month.

Orsario, a Puerto Rican, has never been knocked out. He lost a decision to Former Champion Sandy Saddler about a year ago, and recently returned from a tour of South America.

In five-round preliminaries, Pat Thomas, Washington lightweight, winner in 13 out of 15 fights, meets Joe Dimines of Baltimore, and Johnny Pratt, former Army middleweight champ, takes on Benny Droll of Pittsburgh.

In four-rounders, Bobby Rupart meets Bobby Busick; Rufus Berry faces Johnny Holt and Abe Kiser fights Wallace Sparkle.

Trainers Easy Victors

National Training School scored an easy 60-25 win over the Tri-Square Club of Hagerstown, Md., yesterday at N. T. S. Jimmy Baker led the victors with 21 points.

Armstrong Wins Title

Armstrong Tech won the Negro interhigh basketball championship by defeating Dunbar, 62-54, yesterday at the National Guard Armory. In the first game of the double-header, Phelps downed Cardozo, 48-35.

This is the seventh consecutive year that Armstrong has either won or tied for the title.

The nighcap was close until the last four minutes. But with the score 54-52, Armstrong Tech pulled away.

Gene Lawrence and Reggie Lee combined to come within one point of matching Dunbar's total score. They scored 53 points between them, Lawrence with 27 points and Lee with 26. Francis Chase and Don Lipscomb had 14 and 13 points, respectively, for Dunbar.

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

One Harassment Follows Another

Sixes and sevens. That's the economic outlook from the Nation's Capital. One harassment follows another. And the period of post-war readjustment stretches on and on without end.

1. The Hydrogen Bomb, more fearsome than the atom, makes

Livingston

Americans shrink from their own power. Business Week, in a brilliant editorial, poses this dilemma: Not to use the H-bomb, because of the danger of retaliation, might mean to risk losing a war. Yet to use it might make large sections of the world uninhabitable.

Russian recognition of the Ho Chi Minh regime in French Indo-China only emphasizes the atomic threat. Britain, France, and the United States have favored the Bao Dai regime, as the Kremlin knew. Therefore Stalin has openly accepted the risk of conflict in the Far East. He's using there, as in eastern Europe, his pressure tactics—seeing how much he can get away with, presumably without war. Ditto in Berlin. Russia's on-and-off blockade of freight movement resembles John L. Lewis' tactics in coal mining.

2. The coal strikes and the threat of a telephone strike suggest that the bright young college graduate, looking for a lucrative career, ought to investigate labor relations. Fact-finding boards seem likely to become a commonplace in American life, so that more and more arbitrators, mediators, and fact-finders will be needed.

Relations between management and labor have not reached that state of affairs where the Government can adopt a hands-off policy. Disputes in basic industries are a heritage of labor's rise to eminence and to political power under Roosevelt and Truman and a continuing domestic disruption. As yet, no satisfactory technique for settling disputes in basic industries has been developed—as President Truman's reluctant resort to a Taft-Hartley Fact-Finding Board makes clear.

3. ECA Administrator Paul G. Hoffman has returned from the Continent despondent over the Marshall Plan. In Europe, economic nationalism—each country for itself—still runs strong. The British have refused to go along with the Hoffman program for European integration, which means cutting down trade quotas, lowering tariffs, and making currencies convertible. As a result, Hoffman is thinking of suggesting a cut in the ECA appropriation for next year. One effect of that would be to curtail American exports. The more important effect would be to regenerate European distrust of American motives.

ECA's Political Pressures

Hoffman has insisted all along that the United States does not intend to interfere with the domestic affairs of foreign governments. And superficially, the term "integration" implies noninterference. America wants free and multilateral trade. Yet, in Britain, integration would mean the modification of rationing and price controls. ECA was set up for relief, reconstruction and rehabilitation. But Hoffman, indirectly, is pressing for internal political changes.

4. The Department of Agriculture, already saturated with the potato blues, is now confronted with heavy surpluses in cotton and wheat. The department has stated that its proposals for reduction in 1950 wheat plantings did not go far enough and a further cut in plantings is to be sought for 1951. The whole farm program is creaking at the seams. Nobody is happy about it, including the farmer, whose income is dropping.

5. The business situation is deteriorating, partly because of strikes. Steel mills are banking furnaces for lack of coal, General Motors is eliminating Saturday and overtime work, and Chrysler has lost production because of the walkout over pensions. The flow of purchasing power to workers has dropped a bit.

Furthermore, unemployment jumped to nearly 4,500,000 in January from 3,500,000 in December. Part of this was seasonal—normally the service and construction industries reduce forces during the winter months. Part of it was due to unusually severe weather, especially out West. As an indication, 391,000 workers who had jobs were not working because of bad weather; in December, the number was only 67,000.

In One Word: 'Overproduction'

But you can't "excuse away" the entire increase. Jobs are not being created as fast as people are joining the labor force. The so-called sure-thing, first-half upturn in business—a carry-through of the momentum of the last few months of 1949—has not taken place, as this column suggested.

A clue to the business situation is autos. Supply has so caught up with demand that Michael J. Saada, writing in the Wall Street Journal, summed up the convention of the National Automobile Dealers' Association at Atlantic City in one word: "Overproduction." During these slack winter months, dealers are offering concessions to get rid of cars and prevent them from backing up. Conceivably, production schedules might even be cut. That might have the effect of transferring some production from the first to the second half. No such output as last year, nearly 5,100,000 passenger cars, can be expected in 1950. The 1929 total was 4,600,000.

The inference is that steel demand may subside somewhat. And the steel companies might begin wooing customers instead of vice versa. Prices would be shaded and profits per ton of steel would tend to decline. The steel industry is far from famine but it may do a little less feasting. Stockholders, however, should continue to fare well. The United States Steel dividend rate, at $2.60 a common share, is less than half the 1949 level of earnings of $5.39 per share. And '49 earnings were impaired by a 42-day strike.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Feb. 11 (AP).—Scattered rain in the Southwest washed away a good deal of the recent enthusiasm for new crop wheat futures on the Board of Trade today. These deliveries dropped for losses of more than a cent while the nearby March contract gave up only a small fraction.

Corn also was sold down. Partly this was considered a technical move after the advance of the past few days, but the lower trend got a push from heavy country offerings of cash grain and introduction of bills in Congress which would permit sales of Government feed grains at lower prices.

Wheat ended ¼@1⅝ lower; corn was ⅛@⅜ lower; oats were ⅛@½ lower; rye was ¼@⅝ lower; soybeans were ⅝ lower to ¼ higher and lard was 5 to 15 cents a hundred pounds higher.

Scattered sections of Kansas and Oklahoma reported rain, mostly rather light. It was too early to tell if this was the much-needed moisture in the dry area, but some bulls in the new crop wheat deliveries decided to take no chances on a weekend downpour ending the drought picture.

New York Cotton

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—All cotton futures deliveries at New York and New Orleans advanced into new highs for the season today. At the close prices were 50 cents to $1.50 a bale higher.

The market started irregular, with losses extending to 50 cents a bale. Shortly after the opening, however, selling pressure dried up as some of the early sellers became nervous and started to cover.

A shortage of contracts developed on the advance, which was stimulated by rumors regarding the Government selling price on its 1948 pooled cotton stocks. The rumors were to the effect that the CCC would announce its price on the 1948 loan cotton stocks selling program sometime after today's close.

Understanding Seen Big Need In Bias Fight

A Washington psychiatrist yesterday declared that the fight against prejudice must be based on an understanding of motives behind prejudice to be successful.

"Prejudice is part of our sick culture—it can neither be argued away nor reasoned away," said Dr. Julius Schreiber, former director of the National Institute of Social Relations.

He explained "the need to feel comfortable about ourselves and the group we belong to," and other motives behind racial and related prejudices at a session of the Young Adult Conference on Civil Rights now in progress at Howard University.

Dr. Schreiber laid out a program of research, education, legislation and civic action based on the apprehension of these motives.

He discounted the effects of being called "visionaries, idealists and impractical," as long as "integrity and courage" were present in the person fighting prejudice.

At a reception in the School of Religion last night, Francis H. Russell, director of the State Department's Office of Public Affairs, spoke on "Youth's Share in International Affairs."

At the closing session this afternoon, representatives of the Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths will discuss "The Ethical and Religious Basis of Human Rights."

Public Can See First Army TV Training Program

The television public will be able to sit in on the first TV Army reserve training program, to be broadcast by Columbia Broadcasting System from 8 to 9 p. m. Tuesday, over Channel 9, WOIC.

The telecast, on the subject "The Infantry Division in Attack," will have action scenes from World War II dubbed into the instruction views, given by military personnel in New York.

Officers and men of nine reserve units in the area will view the program as part of their regular training session, in room 5A 1070, Pentagon Building. They will be given tests before and after the showing to determine the value of the plan, according to the announcement by Col. John F. Davis, senior instructor for the organized reserve in the area, who arranged the TV program.

Surgeon General Health Councils Meet Saturday

Five national health councils that advise the Surgeon General of Public Health Service will convene here next Saturday.

Purpose of the meeting, at the Federal Security Building, is twofold, said Oscar R. Ewing, Federal Security Administrator. It will enable Surgeon General Leonard A. Scheele to discuss with the councils matters of general policy, and to outline current public health programs.

The councils, composed of experts in medical science, public health and public affairs, include the National Advisory Health Council and similar special councils on cancer, heart, mental health and dental research.

'Stool Pigeon'

ADA Blasts Loyalty Test Of NROTC

By the United Press

Americans for Democratic Action last night accused the Navy of "stool pigeon" tactics in requiring student reservists to sign the department's loyalty certificate.

ADA National Director Charles M. LaFollette in a letter to Secretary of Defense Louis Johnson said:

"The Navy Department is leading the Nation down a dangerous path by insisting on making informers of the youth under its control."

The loyalty certificate that all applicants for the Navy Reserve Officers Training Corps are required to sign lists the organizations labeled subversive by the Department of Justice and asks that the applicant if he has been a member or otherwise associated or identified with any of them.

The requirement came to ADA's attention through complaints from its student chapters at Harvard and other schools where the Reserve Corps students were required to sign it. Besides certifying that they do not belong to any organization on the subversive list, signers must say whether they have attended meetings of such groups and, if so, to list the names and addresses of other persons attending.

Lafollette said the Harvard faculty "has rightly condemned this totalitarian-like requirement." There are more than 50 colleges and universities that offer NROTC training.

"This danger (in creating informers) is pointed up most vividly," Lafollette said, "when the Navy loyalty oath is considered in connection with the news from Berlin that the Russians in East Germany have set up a new Red Gestapo under which, as reported by the press, 'youth will be encouraged to become a gigantic internal spy ring, just as the Hitler Jugend was taught to tattle even on parents.'"

New Arc Lamp Cement Developed At Fort Belvoir

A versatile cement which prevents failures to continuous arc lamp illuminations has been developed and successfully tested at the Engineer and Research Development Laboratories, Fort Belvoir, Va.

The cement, for joining together the postive carbons in high-powered searchlights, air dries when applied to ends of the carbons, softens when heated at high temperature, and resets at the still higher heat at the burning end.

Heretofore, the carbon rods were joined end-to-end with mortise and tenon type joints. As the forward rod burned down, the small unburned stub was often dislodged as it fed into the lamp, causing illumination failure.

ERDL illumination engineers said the recent tests with the new cement included a series of eight experimental joints without a single failure.

MARYLAND

ATTENTION SUBDIVIDERS

If you are not a subdivider but you want to become one here is your opportunity to make several million dollars in a few years. There are about 500 acres of land located about 4 blocks over the District line in the zone of the new South Capitol st. Bridge. This bridge is operating now with a capacity of 50,000 automobiles daily. This bridge brings our property within 12 minutes of the heart of Washington. If you ride to the D. C. line stop your car a moment and look ahead and see a big woods. That's this 500 acres. If you look to the right and look to the left you'll observe about 100 million dollars worth of apartments and homes building right up to our properties. Of this 500 acres we have already sold 100 acres. The remaining 400 you can have for $3000 an acre . . . and most of this property will be commercial and shopping centers. To give you an idea of what shopping centers are worth: On the Virginia end of the bridges it is worth about $500,000 an acre. Do you want to see what benefits the development of land can do for a neighborhood? Well, I built Chevy Chase, D. C., when that was all woods. I paid $800.000 for 400 acres. Now 1 acre of that same land at McKinley st. and Connecticut ave. is worth more than I paid for the 400 acres. I bought this 500 acres S. E. for $500 an acre 30 years ago, expecting this bridge to be built much sooner than it was built. Now there is no guessing. The bridge is built and in operation. You ought to make 20 million dollars there in a few years.

I'm in my 83rd year and I'm settling my own estate and I'm turning this over to a young man. This is a young man's job. Very small amount of cash payment will handle this, provided you have good credit and have faith in yourself and faith in the growth of Washington.

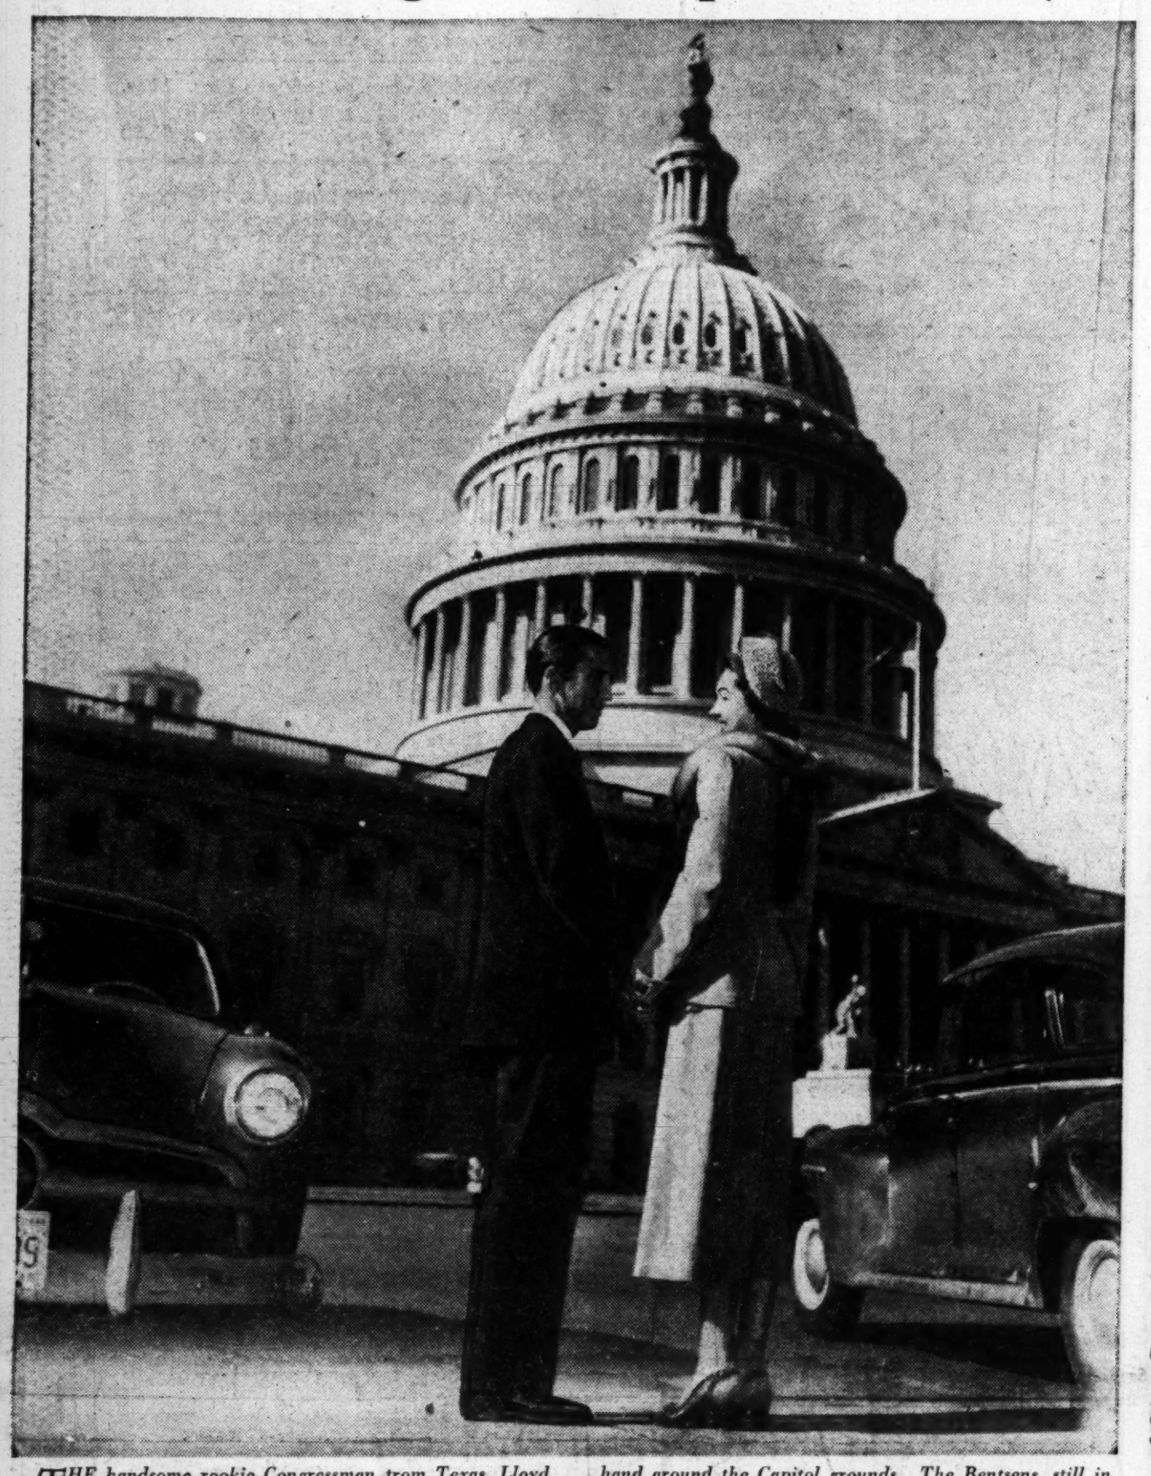
WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 12, 1950

'Most Photogenic Couple on the Hill' Loves Wide-Open Spaces—of Md.



THE handsome rookie Congressman from Texas, Lloyd Bentsen, and his glamorous wife look more like a couple of young honeymooners when they stroll hand-in-hand around the Capitol grounds. The Bentsens, still in their twenties, have been tabbed by colleagues on the Hill as "the Congressman and his wife who least look the part"

Congress Rookie Is 'Dreamy'; Wife Was a Model

By Norma Lanum

TO THE office girls on Capitol Hill he's known as "that dreamy number in room 317"; to veteran Congressmen from his home State he's "the old man," and he's plain "Benny" to home-town neighbors who drop in to call.

That's the handsome rookie Congressman from Texas, Lloyd Bentsen, who just celebrated his 29th birthday last night.

Six-foot-plus, Texas-tanned Lloyd Bentsen is the second youngest Representative on the Hill, and —according to the girl secretaries and clerks who work near his office—one of the best-looking.

His tall, brunette wife, a former Conover model, is an eye-opener, too, making them probably the most photogenic couple on Capitol Hill.

Youth has been no handicap as yet to Congressman Benny. He's accustomed to handling jobs usually reserved for older men. At 23 he was an Air Force major and commander of a bomber squadron in the European theater. Within a year after his discharge, at 25, he was the Lone Star State's youngest county judge.

Yearns for Wide Open Spaces

SO HE'S quite at home tackling the major responsibilities that go with a Congressman's job. But, despite the fact that his staff keep his office decorated with gaily painted gourds and other mementoes of the Great Southwest, he yearns every now and then for those wide open spaces of the Rio Grande Valley where he was raised.

He and his wife are just getting settled in a house in nearby Maryland which offers at least a hint of the vastness of their home country.

The youthful Congressman bought a large white frame hilltop house in Spring Brook for his wife, Beryl, and their boys, 5-year-old Lloyd and Lan, who is 2½.

"We rented a house in Bethesda for a while," remarks Mrs. Bentsen. "But it was much too crowded. There was a house on one side of us and another house on the other side."

At their Maryland countryside home the young Bentsens have a whole hill to themselves. Their small estate, generously landscaped with pines, elms, willows and pear trees, includes a real old-time windmill, a barn with seven stalls, a chicken coop and plenty of romping room for their two future cowboys.

Worn Boots Since Baby Shoes

THE BOYS, incidentally, have been in Texas cowboy boots since their baby-shoe days. And their love for things Western isn't the only characteristic the Bentsen boys share with their dad.

"Lloyd will climb up on a box and make a speech at the drop of a hat," reports his mother. Mrs. Bentsen also tells of the time she eavesdropped on her 2½-year-old as he scaled the kitchen table in search of a cookie box.

Before reaching the goodies the blond, brown-eyed Lan stood up on the table and proclaimed loudly: "Ladies and gentlemen!"

Take Up All Her Time

THOSE boys take up just about all Mrs. Bentsen's time—of which there is much less in Washington than in Texas.

"I can't figure out just why," says the Congressman's wife, "But it takes longer to do things in Washington."

"Back in Texas we drive into town, buy the groceries, take the laundry and cleaning in and we're back home within an hour. But here we have to wait long intervals for anything we want."

"B. A." Bentsen is particularly impatient with the slow pace of the Capital's official teas and cocktail parties. "First, we have to wait 20 minutes to park the car; then stand 20 minutes in the receiving line. Once inside the party there's always a good quarter of an hour wait in line for the cup of tea. Afterwards we wait half an hour for the car again."

Classmates at Texas U.

BERYL and "Benny" Bentsen grew up in neighboring Texas towns (well, 400 miles apart) and were classmates and friends at the University of Texas. But their romance didn't bud until after graduation when they met again, quite casually, in New York.

Young Bentsen had just enlisted in the Air Force and was preparing to leave for overseas. "B. A." was leading the hectic life of a Conover fashion mannequin. "We modeled thin silk dresses in Central Park in the winter and fur coats in steaming summertime showrooms."

They were married soon after their reunion.

Right now Congressman and Mrs. Bentsen are deep in plans for the decoration of their new box-shaped house. The long living room is paneled in "wormy cherrywood" and brightened with reds, greens and yellow and a nameless neutral color.

The chicken coop has been transformed by her artistic flair into a gay bar and playroom. The walls are pine paneled and the ceiling has low wooden beams. Again, bright reds and greens predominate.

Adjacent to the playroom is the barn. The Bentsens have no immediate plans for the seven empty stalls, however. But they do want to buy a pony "or an old tired nag that won't move faster than a slow walk" for the kids.

Liked the Senators' Trolley

LLOYD and his little brother seldom get into Washington for a visit, but when they do, it usually includes dropping in on dad at the Capitol. Last Wednesday they made one of these junkets and it was all mom could do to get them away from the underground trolley, which runs from the Capitol to the Senate Office Building.

Once home from a family excursion to Washington the Congressman's wife is more thankful than ever for the wide-open spaces of their Maryland country home.

"I can just turn the kids loose with Flaps (their cocker pup) and relax."

HER two future cowboys, 5-year-old Lloyd and Lan, who is 2, take up just about all of Beryl Bentsen's time. While Lan is fed his midmorning snack, his brother scales the kitchen cabinet and gets his own. The Bentsens live in a hilltop house in Spring Brook, Md.

Harris & Ewing Photos.

REPRESENTATIVE BENTSEN'S children have been wearing Texas cowboy boots ever since their baby-shoe days. Lanny brings them into Mom in the morning for her to help put them on. The children are outdoor boys and spend most of their days romping on the grounds

WHAT'S a visit to the Capitol without sampling the famous bean soup in the House dining room! Texas Representative and Mrs. Bentsen report the soup's swell. But they laughed "no comment" on the Capitol Hill controversy between Virginia black-eyed peas and Texas black-eyed beans

EACH family excursion to Washington must include a ride on the subway connecting dad's office in the old House Office building with the Capitol. The boys could ride forever if the folks would only let them

Friends 'Gang Up' on Visiting George Garretts

By Marie McNair

JUST let it be known that the George Angus Garretts are here and their friends gang up on them. In a nice way, of course, with parties to welcome them home.

Back from Dublin where he is American Minister, George Garrett and Mrs. Garrett have been staying at their estate in Virginia, Chilly Bleak Farm. With another week of State Department consultations in view, Mr. and Mrs. Garrett moved into town on Friday and are living in Myron Hofer's house which he graciously turned over to them before he left for the South.

On Thursday night Capt. Edwin D. Graves and Mrs. Graves (she was Mrs. George Sloane—remember?) entertained at dinner for Mr. and Mrs. Garrett. Friday night, Mrs. Dwight Davis gave a dinner in their honor and last night, Grover Loening, member of the advisory board of the National Air Museum, was host at dinner for them before the last of The Three Dances.

Both superb riders, the Garretts have made a hit with the Irish—for that reason and many more. While they're home they expect to hunt the familiar countryside before leaving this area on March 10. Their plans now are to sail on board the America on March 15.

Sweet Pretty Girl, 19, Engaged to Be Married, Shrinks From Prospect, Saying She's Not Ready; Also She's Afraid of Sleeping Alone in the Dark

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Our 19-year-old daughter Susan is my reason for writing to you. She is a very sweet and pretty girl but she is also rather quick tempered and it is not unusual for her to have her father, her younger brother and myself very much upset.

Susan is engaged to a nice young man and although she loves him very much and is always talking of the time when they will be married, she still clings to the feeling that she is not yet ready for marriage. We enjoy a normally happy family life and there is no reason why she shouldn't be happy, but still at times she is very unhappy and bored with everything.

She is especially lonesome at night when she goes to bed, and often asks me to sleep with her or to leave a light on, because when she is alone in the darkness she thinks about death and becomes very frightened. I don't know how to cope with this situation and would appreciate any advice you may offer, for I am very worried. D. R.

Too Little Loved, Too Much Restricted

DEAR D. R.: It seems to me that Susan's doldrums, tempers, boredoms, fears of being alone in the dark, shuddering thoughts of death, etc., all put her in the emotional category of a 3-year-old, who has been so "smothered" by over-protective guidance and supervision as to have a conditioned feeling of acute frustration, and also an ingrained conviction of being dangerously helpless (if left alone) in a world that is creeping and crawling with all sorts of sinister forces.

There isn't a hint in your letter as to how she has been reared, other than this recital of symptoms, which in itself tells volumes, I think. And if it is a fact, as I surmise, that she has been brought up on a close rein, with admonitions to "watch out" and "take care" a daily singsong in her early experience, then it isn't surprising that at 19 she backs away from getting married, even though she feels much in love with a nice fiance.

By and large, her problem is acute anxiety about everything, and this is a typical chronic affliction of the so-called "rejected" child, who wasn't warmly and comfortably loved by the mother in infancy and early years,—although you may have "compensated" for lack of true cordiality in maternal feeling, by scrupulously guarding her from bodily "harm."

Girl Needs Mature Brand of Mothering

THE FACT that Susan is often at loggerheads with the family, causing father, mother and brother to be "upset," suggests that she feels "one alone" in a hostile camp, in the family circle; and if none is spared her tempers, it must be that none sympathetically understands her nature. And this again is the usual fate (in the family circle) of the youngster who never was helpfully understood, and loved with empathy, by the mother. Incidentally, her tempers are merely manifestation of inexplicable anxieties erupting uncontrollably.

If you really seriously wish to comprehend the basis of Susan's recurrent wretchedness, I suggest you study Dr. Margaret Ribble's book "The Rights of Infants" (Columbia University Press), which shows how the twig is bent—towards neurosis or emotional health. And having read that, don't break your heart over mistakes you've made, but instead turn over a new leaf and start doing better. Start loving your daughter, with infinite patience and sympathetic interest to know what she feels and thinks;—and isn't it true that until now, even when trying to soothe her fears, you've been impatient and shushed them as "nonsense?"

To get Susan firmly squared off on the road that leads to good emotional health and normal self reliance—which means release from neurotic tensions—it is necessary for you to make deep changes in your "feeling"-attitudes toward her; and for guidance in that, a few interviews with a good psychologist would be invaluably helpful, I think. M. H.

Jobe Says...

Like fashion itself, the silhouette too has a dual character this spring—slim as a reed on one hand, full-skirted on the other.

As I've told you before in these columns, the slim silhouette is the smart incoming fashion. It has a new aspect this spring—the "Top Look"—originated by Christian Dior, who fathered the "New Look."

All fashion emphasis has been swung to the top—dropped shoulder lines—wide short sleeves with enormous cuffs—soft, bloused bodices—above a slender skirt.

The smartest spring suits and coats are "Top Look" fashions, too—with very new short wide sleeves and bloused tops, too.

The Washington Post Sponsors Sewing Contest

Here's Chance to Win Cash, Glory

By Peggy Preston

HEAR YE! HEAR YE! All you who sew a fine (or not so fine) seam!

We've something here that will interest you. It's news of the forthcoming tenth annual National Sewing Contest opening March 1. What can it mean to you? Why, all this:

A trip to New York and a stay at the world-famous Waldorf-Astoria Hotel . . . An exciting three-day whirl while on Manhattan's merry-go-round, with parties arranged for the luncheon, dinner and theater hours . . . Attendance, as a guest of honor, at a fashion show when leading Cover Girls will model your own prize-winning costume . . . And, as though all this were not enough, a check for $100!

But, in the event you are not lucky enough to win in the national finals, we've still good news for you. The Washington Post is sponsoring the preliminary area sewing contest for its readers, beginning March 1 and ending April 15. In this contest you have the opportunity of earning one of 16 cash awards—eight first prizes of $50 each; eight second prizes of $20 each. The eight first-prize winning costumes will be sent to New York for judging in the finals.

So, put down your needle and thread for a minute, and read all about it. Rules governing participation in the contest are set forth in the entry blanks which must be clipped from The Washington Post and submitted with your entry or entries.

Contest Has No Age Limits

THE CONTEST is open to women and men of all ages within the area reached by The Washington Post. There are two exceptions, however. Professional designers or dressmakers are not eligible. Neither are employes of the newspaper or their immdiate families.

Garments entered should fall within categories of apparel listed on the entry blanks. There are eight classifications, and we will tell you more about these later.

Contestants may submit as many garments as they wish, provided each garment is accompanied by an official entry blank. All articles must be started and completed within the time limits of the contest—from March 1 to April 15. One more exception, however. In the case of a student, it can have been made during the current school term.

Garments must be mailed or brought to The Washington Post Sewing Contest, 500 National Theater Bldg., 1325 E st. nw., Washington 4, D. C., before April 15.

When all entries are in, a panel of competent judges will assemble to decide the winners in each of the eight classifications. Cash awards—eight first prizes of $50 each and eight second prizes of $20 each—together with other prizes will be awarded winners in each group.

The first-prize winning garment in each classification will be shipped to New York immediately upon selection by the local judges. Other contestants will be notified by announcements in The Washington Post where and when to call for submitted garments.

Will Vie for National Honors

IN NEW YORK, the eight Washington prize-winning garments will vie for honors with those from all parts of the country. Eight national winners will be selected by a panel of international fashion experts. And who knows—perhaps a Washington contestant will be among the lucky ones!

In that event, here is what is in store for her—or him, as the case may be. A three-day holiday in New York some time in June with accommodations at the Waldorf-Astoria, all expenses paid! There'll be a program of theater, dinner and luncheon parties, climaxed by a fashion show featuring the winning garments. Then, as a farewell present before returning home, a cash prize of $100!

What more could an amateur seamstress ask?

Classifications Listed

OUR CONTEST is open to those who cut and sew by standard patterns, and those who use their own original designs. You'll find the classifications listed in the entry blank, but we'll repeat them here. They are as follows:

1. Standard Pattern Group 20 years and older. Coat or suit.
2. Standard Pattern Group, 20 years and older. Tailored dress.
3. Standard Pattern Group, 20 years and older. Soft or dressy dress.
4. Standard Pattern Group, under 20 years. Date, school or business dress.
5. Standard Pattern Group, any age. Glamour clothes: evening, lounge, negligee, beach wear.
6. Original Design, any age. Dress, suit or coat.
7. Standard Pattern or Original Design, any age. Clothes for children from 2 to 6.
8. Standard Pattern or Original Design, any age. Clothes for children from 7 to 12.

AMATEUR sewing enthusiasts will find the classic shirtwaist frock an ideal medium for their talents. Cut from a basic pattern it lends itself nicely to the individual's tastes in detail. This version is done by French designer Jacques Faith. It is made of pleated beige shantung with belt and scarf of pale green

SWAGGER coats in three-quarter length are good fashions for spring, 1950, and those planning to enter the sewing contest sponsored by The Washington Post may be interested in making one similar to that pictured here. Christian Dior designed it of orange and wool tweed, trimmed with black buttons. You can make a swagger coat similar to this from a standard pattern or design your own for Spring, 1950

Things to Remember . . .

WHEN YOU ENTER THE WASHINGTON POST SEWING CONTEST:

1. Be sure every entry blank is completely filled out.
2. Baste entry blank to garment.
3. Package garment carefully. Print name and return address on outside. Insure when mailing.
4. Mail or bring entry to—
   The Washington Post Sewing Contest
   500 National Theater Bldg.
   1325 E Street NW.
   Washington 4, D. C.
5. Remember—You may submit as many entries as you wish, but you must have a separate entry blank for each entry.

Sewing Today Lots Easier Than in 1870

Eighty years of dressmaking with paper patterns will be depicted at a series of fashion shows next week at Woodward & Lothrop's.

Presented by McCall Pattern Corp., the showings will be held Tuesday and Wednesday at 11 a. m. and 3 p. m. daily. Fashions of 1870, the year the firm introduced their paper patterns to home seamstresses, will be shown alongside the newest designs of 1950.

Similarities as well as contrasts in fashion details of the two periods will be pointed up. The dropped shoulder line, as popular today as it was in 1870, will be shown in several garments.

Major point of contrast between the old and new fashions is the lack of yardage in the latter. Women who sew will draw a breath of relief when they realize how little of the tedium of sewing back in the '70's remains today. For instead of the yards and yards of skirt edged with interminable lengths of braid and tassels and miles of ribbon bows, she has only a slim, trim skirt and a neat bloused top to cope with.

Interesting, too, is the note that while Miss 1870 made her voluminous costumes to last for years, surveys show that women who sew today make an average of 27 garments a year.

Miss Helen Bowles, McCall stylist, will be commentator at the showing.

Club Arranges Fashion Show

A luncheon and fashion show will be given by the women of Belle Haven Country Club Wednesday, 12:30 p. m. Guests will be greeted by Mrs. Calvin Soriero, wife of the club's new president, and Mrs. Eugene Olmi, hospitality chairman.

Others assisting will be Mrs. Hugh Hammond, Mrs. Franklin W. Youry, Mrs. W. R. Davis, Mrs. Harvey Hannah and Mrs. Milton A. Leadeater. Fashions will be presented by Woodward and Lothrop's store.

District Water's 'Moderately Hard' But Anne Knows Just How to Ease Homemakers' Dishwashing Problem

JUST how hard is the District's dishwater? Maybe you've wondered when, rushing through your chores, you saw soap bubbles fade infuriatingly away and a grease ring form around the dishpan. Here's one letter on the subject that just came in:

DEAR ANNE:

Since moving to Washington, I've had trouble getting soap to lather properly. The city where I formerly lived had very soft water, and we had no problem in this regard. But I'm wondering if it would make my work easier to use a water softener here. If so, what kind and how much should I use? G. W. S.

Washington water rates only "moderately hard" averaging around 5 grains hardness. It runs from 2.5 grains in very rainy weather to 8 grains at some other times.

Detergents aren't affected by this degree of hardness. With soap, however, water softeners are of help in laundering, dishwashing or bathing. They make less soap necessary, prevent curds, and keep grease rings and balls from forming.

The hexamata-phosphate type of softener, sold under trade names, is quite satisfactory for home use. One teaspoonful per gallon usually is enough for Washington water. Use just enough to make the water feel noticeably "slippery" before adding soap.

DEAR ANNE:

How can you make "whipped cream with dry milk? I've heard it can be done. Since we are seven in family, I'd be interested in other money-saying ways of using dry milk, too. S.C.S.

Though it hasn't the calories of whipped cream, dry skim milk topping has plenty of fluff and plenty of vitamins. You can use it on cake, pie, cocoa—in fact, in almost any way that you would use a whipped cream topping:

WHIPPED TOPPING

½ cup water
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ cup nonfat milk powder
2 tablespoons sugar
¼ teaspoon vanilla

Put water and lemon juice in a bowl and add nonfat milk powder. Beat with rotary beater until stiff. Beat in sugar and vanilla. Chill and use as you would whipped cream. Makes about 2½ cups topping.

This recipe comes from a booklet that you can get free from the Department of Agriculture, called "How to Use Whole and Nonfat Dry Milk." This gives lots of suggestions about using dry milk.

You can pick up a copy at the publications desk of Agriculture's Administration Building, on Independence ave. between 12th and 14th sts. sw., or by writing the Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

DEAR ANNE:

For B.H., (on February 7, 1950) who is looking for a copy of "Holiday" magazine, I suggest she write to the H. W. Wilson Co., 950 University ave., New York 52, N. Y. This company buys and sells periodicals (American and foreign) on a vast scale. A Washington book store recommended them to me. S.N.

Thanks, S.N. I understand B.H. has now obtained the copy she wanted, but your tip will be of interest to other readers in a similar quandry about back issues of magazines.

EVEN the second family of the land has dishwashing problems on maid's night out! This picture of the Veep and Mrs. Alben Barkley in their Connecticut ave. apartment was taken by H. G. Walker of Life Magazine.

Joy of Living Depends On Choosing Right Diet

By Ida Jean Kain

FOOD makes a difference, an enormous difference, yet it's easy to get set in our ways of menu planning and miss out on the best nutrition.

Many American meals are made up too largely of breadstuffs, meats, sweets and fats. These foods satisfy taste, furnish enough protein and calories, but fail to furnish the minerals and vitamins that add that extra spark to living.

I'd like to toss out a challenge to homemakers. For the next two weeks, shop absolutely scientifically for the foods that give the best possible nutrition.

There are easy guides to go by. Perhaps the most simple is a dietary pattern for one day made up of the basic seven food groups: milk; vegetables, 3 servings, 1 citrus or tomato; meat, poultry or fish; eggs, or 1 other protein food (cheese, nuts, legumes); bread, whole-grain or enriched, amount depending on need; cereal, whole grain or fortified, as desired; butter or fortified margarine.

Vegetables First

All right, let's market—vegetables first. If you ordinarily choose bleached lettuce as a green leafy vegetable, you're not doing right by the family. Pick up some spinach, endive or escarole to add to the salad . . . it's the green leaves that furnish the vitamins and minerals. See that there is some dark green or deep yellow vegetable in the menu every day, plus potatoes and one other. Don't keep serving the same two or three vegetables, vary them—serve shoestring beets, a half acorn squash filled with peas, wild rice in place of potatoes, collards, and broccoli with cheese sauce. Add raw cauliflower to a salad, raw spinach leaves or carrot slivers. Or serve cole slaw.

One citrus fruit should be served daily—a whole orange, a half grapefruit, or fresh or canned juice.

When a green vegetable, a salad and potatoes are served in a meal, the dessert might be a yellow fruit, such as stewed or canned apricots or peaches, or pineapple.

Check on Cereals

If the children are not gaining in weight and height as fast as they should, look into the cereal they are having. See that it is wholegrain—ALL of the wheat or rye or oats. In winter a hot cereal is best.

On the meat, poultry or fish dish, the family should have one or more servings daily. Do you serve liver once a week? If the children are pale and anemic, serve it twice. Beef and pork liver are just as nutritious as calves'. And do you frequently serve 100 percent wholegrain bread . . . not just whole wheat, but 100 percent wholegrain?

One Egg Daily

Does each member of the family have five eggs a week? One a day is even better. Do all adult members have a pint of milk a day, or one glass and an ounce serving of cheese? And do the children have a quart each, all told?

Including all the protective foods in abundant amounts steps up the grocery bill . . . but it will also greatly step up the joy of living.

Loudoun Women's Club Hears GWU Educator's School Plea

By M. Grace Brooks

Leesburg, Va., Feb. 11.—Stressing the great need of additional Federal aid to schools, Dr. B. H. Jarman, assistant to the president of George Washington University, spoke before the Women's Club of Loudoun Saturday. "The only way we can exist and have a future is to have a public school system that reaches all," Dr. Jarman said. He was introduced to the group assembled in the club room of the Leesburg Inn by Mrs. Ruth C. Bradfield, chairman of the education department which sponsored the program. A business session and a program of music were included on the agenda.

During the business session, the president, Mrs. Arthur S. Jenkins, reported on the State board meeting held at the Jefferson Hotel in Richmond on January 17 and 18. The music, under the direction of Mrs. Edwin Miner, consisted of selections by groups from school bands. The Purcellville band quartet included Barbara Graham, Phyllis James, Lynn Adams and Bobbie Miner. The group from the Leesburg Band included Templar Titus, Benjamin Bridges, John Vesey, Bruce McIntosh and Buddy Bradfield.

Miss Margaret Spring, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph J. Spring of near Lovettsville, has been appointed registrar for State Teachers' College, Shippensburg, Pa. Miss Spring, 21 years of age, is the youngest registrar the college ever had. Previous to her appointment, she was private secretary to the dean of the college. She graduated from Lovettsville High School when 15 years of age and attended Flora McDonald College in North Carolina.

Miss Spring spent the weekend with her parents here.

The Woman's Auxiliary of St. James' Episcopal Church will meet Monday afternoon in the Parish Hall. Mrs. E. B. White and Mrs. Matthew Kohlhoss will be joint hostesses. At this time, plans will be completed for the annual pancake supper on Shrove Tuesday in the Parish Hall.

The Leesburg Garden Club will meet Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. T. Frank Osburn. The speaker will be Edward L. Stock of Stock's Nursery, who will talk on "Garden Maintenance." Exhibits will consist of arrangements of dried material or evergreens.

The Leesburg Parent-Teacher Association will meet at the high school auditorium at 8 p. m. Wednesday. Founders Day will be observed at this meeting, with a program presented by Mrs. E. B. White and Mrs. John William Clemens. Mrs. F. E. Bishop is president of the organization.

Mrs. J. R. H. Alexander was hostess to the Altar Guild of St. James' Church at her home on Monday afternoon. Refreshments were served following the meeting.

Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Pearce Dennis and small son, Littleton, expect to sail from Norway on the S. S. Oslofjord on March 21 for the United States. They will spend some time at Sage Hill Farm near Leesburg, home of Col. and Mrs. E. W. Clark. Mr. Dennis is the son of Mrs. Clark. He has recently been transferred from Oslo, Norway, to Genoa, Italy, as vice consul. Since he was commissioned in January, 1946, as a Foreign Service officer, he has served at Munich and Oslo.

Ritchie Moving in When Morgan Vacates

'Ranleigh' to Stay in Hands of British

By Ellen Buell Parry

GENERAL Sir Neil Ritchie, arriving from England next month, will replace General Sir William Morgan as head of the British Military Services Mission in Washington. General Ritchie will move into the house where his two predecessors, Field Marshal Lord Henry Maitland-Wilson and General Morgan, have lived—beautiful "Ranleigh," located a mile and a half from Chain Bridge, near McLean, Va.

ELLEN PARRY

Randolph Leigh, 20 odd years ago, bought 60 acres on Old Georgetown Pike, built "Ranleigh," a charming Southern Colonial-type mansion. He lived there until he built and moved into another house—this one of modern design—on his property, "Lower Ranleigh."

He leased "Ranleigh" to Field Marshal and Lady Wilson. During the war, he rented "Lower Ranleigh" to Mr. and Mrs. Chester Bowles, then O. P. A. Director, now Governor of Connecticut. Later the Herbert Brownells—he being Thomas E. Dewey's manager during the last Presidential campaign—had the house. "Lower Ranleigh" presently is occupied by British Military Attache Colonel and Mrs. J. C. Windsor-Lewis, and their two little girls.

Both "Ranleigh" and "Lower Ranleigh" have been the setting for many outstanding gay dinner and cocktail parties, and have had numerous interesting houseguests. With General and Lady Ritchie and their three small children, moving in on April 1, this entertaining will undoubtedly continue. Field Marshal Bernard Montgomery, Viscount of Alamein, was a houseguest at "Ranleigh" during his last visit here.

FRANCES BUTLER, 8, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Leo Butler, is credited with saving the lives of her mother, sister and aunt in a recent fire that gutted their historical old Howard County (Md.) home—"Meriweather."

The interior of the house, near Brookville on the Olney rd., was burned out completely before dawn on February 3, and the magnificent antiques with which it was so tastefully and exquisitely furnished were totally destroyed. The estate had been included in Maryland's Home and Garden Tours in recent years.

Frances, waking about 3 a. m., smelled smoke and called to the family. They all got out safely.

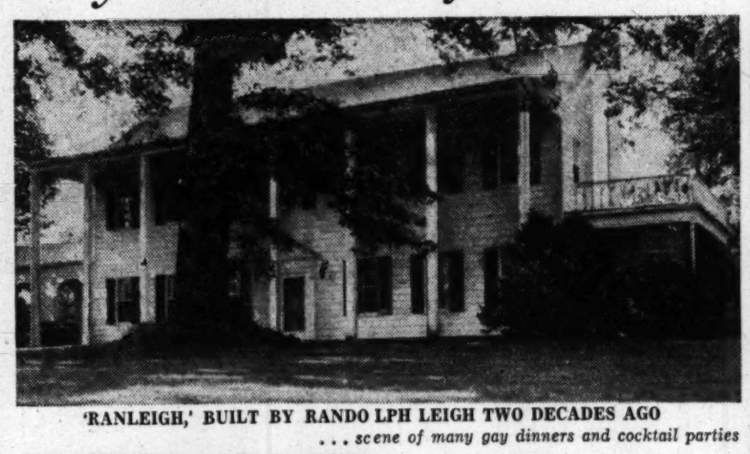
One of the first things to burn was the telephone wire. The maid, with just a coat over her night clothes, ran a mile and a half to the home of the sheriff, Fred Kramer, for help.

The West Friendship Fire Department received the call at 3:35 a. m., but when it arrived the full basement and first floor were ablaze. The Lisbon Fire Department answered the call, too. The men of both companies worked the rest of the night trying to save the house.

Celia Butler, the mother, had just returned that afternoon from a trip to Florida. Her husband, Leo, son of the late Supreme Court Justice Pierce Butler, was in Mexico on business. Leo Butler has a large contracting and civil engineering firm, with offices at Silver Spring.

Justice Butler, many years ago, bought a farm in Howard County. He and his family spent weekends and summers there. Leo knew of and loved nearby "Meriweather" as a child. It had a beautiful old stone house on it, built in 1806. He bought it, restored and added to it, and he and Celia and their three children (besides Frances, there is Ceci and Tommy) have lived there a number of years. Tommy was at Landon School the night of the fire.

The Butlers have had to move back to the small house on the original farm of Justice Butler, still owned by the family, until "Meriweather" can be rebuilt from the stone structure remaining.



'RANLEIGH,' BUILT BY RANDOLPH LEIGH TWO DECADES AGO

GEN. MORGAN

GEN. RITCHIE

A NUMBER of people near McLean, Va., aren't quite sure where they live. They are all neighbors and their houses are all on the same road, but you'd never guess it from a look at their listings in the telephone directory.

We find, for instance, that Mrs. William Doak, wife of the late Secretary of Labor under President Coolidge, lives on Fairfax rd.; so does investment broker Hugh Auchincloss and John Blandford, former head of the National Housing Administration, recently returned, with Mrs. Blandford, from business for our government in Greece.

Henry W. Riley, Assistant Treasurer of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development; real estate broker Alexander B. Hagner, and Navy Department engineer Gordon S. Mustin are listed as living on Chain Bridge rd.

Described as living on Great Falls rd. are Maj. A. Evan Gwynne, U. S. A. F.; Lieut. Col. David P. Gibbs; and R. Gordon Barton, who has a large kennel and raises boxers.

Paul T. Cornwell and O. E. Ofstrom live on Old Georgetown Pike. We have a map that designates this same road as the Leesburg road.

This road of many names begins at Chain Bridge, goes up by Langley and Forestville (if one turns off to the right for a mile, just before reaching Forestville, one will arrive at Great Falls) through Dranesville and Daysville. These places have little more than a grocery store and filling station. If one stays right straight on the road, one will land in Leesburg.

This road originally was known as the Old Georgetown Pike; and, as far as we know, that is still its official name, at least from Langley up. In the old days, there were several interesting toll houses on this road, between Chain Bridge and Leesburg.

White House Aide's Fiancee Faces Packed Party Docket

Miss Patricia Moore, who will marry Capt. James George Shanahan, Army White House aide, on February 18, is being entertained at a number of parties. The popular bride-elect is the daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. James E. Moore. Her wedding will take place in Fort Myer Chapel.

Mrs. J. Lawton Collins, wife of the Chief of Staff of the Army, and her daughter, Miss Nancy Collins, gave a luncheon shower for Miss Moore last week, and Mr. and Mrs. George A. Horkan entertained at a cocktail party and bar shower for the couple on Thursday.

Brig. Gen. and Mrs. C. V. R. Schuyler and their son-in-law and daughter, Lieut. and Mrs. Edward S. Saxby, entertained Friday at cocktails and a shower for Miss Moore and Captain Shanahan, while yesterday Miss Virginia Timberman, daughter of Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Thomas S. Timberman, gave a dinner for members of the wedding party. This afternoon Brig. Gen. and Mrs. K. E. Webber will give a cocktail party for the engaged couple at their apartment at the Kennedy-Warren.

Miss Nancy Jennings will entertain at a sorority shower for Miss Moore tomorrow, and on Tuesday, February 14, Miss Moore will have a trousseau tea at her parents' home at Fort Myer. Later that afternoon, three bachelors, Lieut. Comdr. Harry Allendorfer, Maj. I. B. Hayes, USMC, and Comdr. Bruce Johnson, USN, will give a cocktail party for the couple, at their quarters at the Naval Gun Factory.

General and Mrs. Moore will give a dinner for the bridesmaids on Thursday, February 16, and the following evening Mrs. R. J. Williamson will have the rehearsal dinner at Fort Myer.

Miss Moore's attendants will be Miss Rosemary Drohan of Winchester, Mass., maid of honor, and Miss Virginia Timberman, Miss Nancy Jennings, Mrs. Edward S. Saxby and Miss Margaret F. Shanahan of Larchmont, N. Y., sister of the bridegroom. The junior bridesmaid will be Miss Mary L. Moore, younger sister of the bride.

Captain Shanahan's ushers will be James E. Moore, jr., brother of the bride; George A. Horkan, Maj. John Horton, Maj. Walter R. King, Lieut. James H. Dallman, USA; Capt. Robert S. Rivers, USAF; Lieut. Col. Stanley R. Larsen, USA; Lieut. Comdr. Harry C. Allendorfer, USN; Maj. Irving B. Hayes, USMC, and Maj. William M. Zimmerman, USA, of Fort Knox, Ky.

Leslie Biffle Sets New Fashion Trend at Achesons' Reception

for men at Secretary of State and Mrs. Dean Acheson's white tie reception for the Diplomatic Corps Tuesday night. He appeared without a vest! The Secretary of the Senate crept around apologetically that night, explaining that the oversight was unintentional; that he had been to a cocktail party that afternoon; had gone home to change for a black tie stag dinner, and had returned home again to switch to white tie. In his haste to get to his third party he completely forgot that particular item without which no man is formally well dressed.

In Palm Beach the girls keep a list of eligible males, with qualifications listed. They're wagering that by another season the name of Sumner Welles, former Assistant Secretary of State, will have to be erased.

Mrs. Henry Alvah Strong, generous benefactor of George Washington University, checks in at George Washington Hospital once a year for a going over. The lady who could have the choicest suite if she desired instead insists on a room in the maternity ward. The reason: she likes to talk to and comfort anxious and expectant fathers.

The George Renchards, recently back from The Hague where Mr. Renchard was with our embassy, are now on a visit to Detroit. They say Mr. Renchard's next post will be at Minister Mesta's legation in Luxembourg.

Mrs. Brooke's son and daughter-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Bates McKee, and her daughter, Mrs. McKee Stone—(Francie to her friends)—are here for the party and the weekend.

Then there was Alfred Lilienthal's cocktail party yesterday for Miss Minerva Bernardino, recently appointed Minister to the United Nations from the Dominican Republic, the first woman to hold such a post.

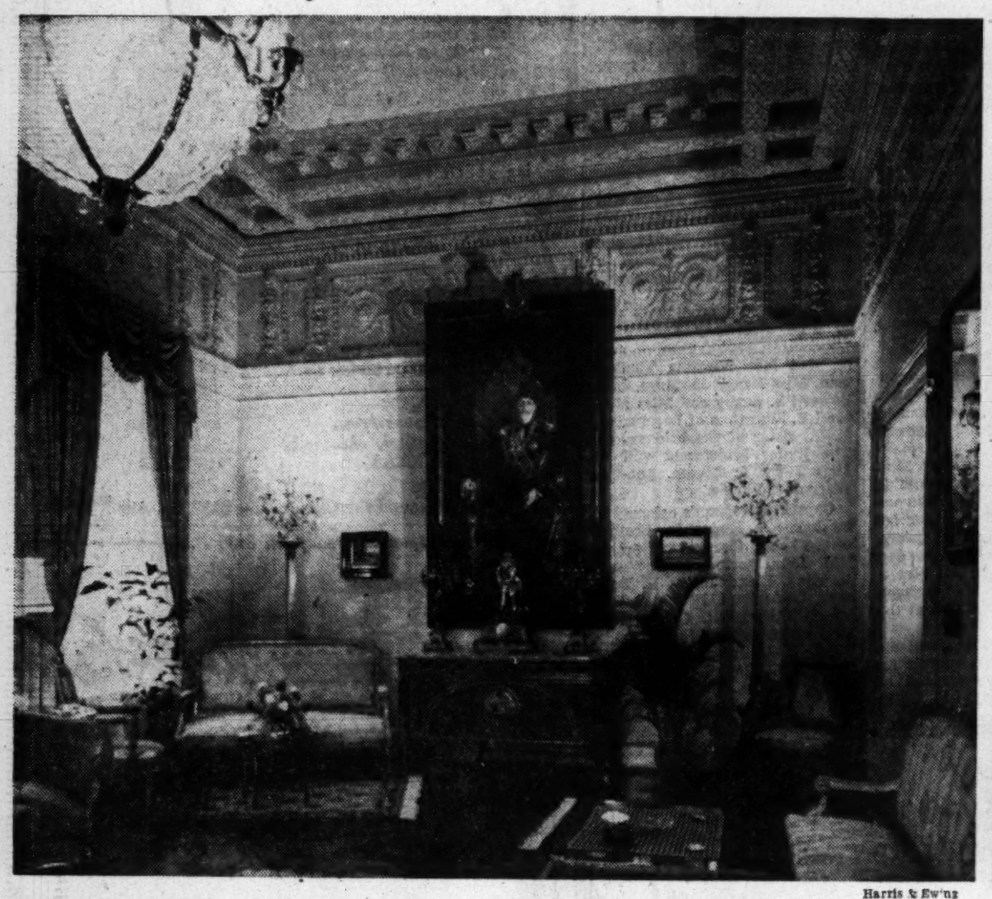
Flowers Reflect Mme. Abdul Rahim's Avocation



Harris & Ewing

RARE Oriental rugs and potted palms give a Middle Eastern air to the drawing room of the Egyptian Embassy. At the far end is a portrait of King Fouad who died in 1936. His son, King Farouk, celebrated his 30th birthday anniversary yesterday. The present dynasty of Egypt was founded by Mohammed Ali Pasha in 1805

MOHAMED KAMIL BEY ABDUL RAHIM, Ambassador of Egypt, in his study at the embassy. The handsome diplomat has had a distinguished career

Arid Egyptian Soil Limits Plant, Flower Cultivation

This is the fifteenth in a series of articles on embassy homes, hosts, and hostesses.

By Elizabeth Maguire

FRAGRANT blossoms and potted palms which fill the drawing rooms of the Egyptian Embassy are more than decorative. The flowers are an unusual treat and the plants are typically Egyptian. In that land, plants outnumber trees, and flowers in profusion are rare indeed.

Mme. Abdul Rahim, beautiful wife of the Ambassador, has a great fondness for flowers which she cannot indulge in her native country. Because water there is more precious than jewels, arable land around country homes is planted with edible products such as fruit or wheat, and very little is given over to flower gardens.

In the city of Cairo, the Ambassadress explains, the rooms and inner courtyards are lined with plants to make up for the lack of trees on the streets.

Oriental rugs covering the parquet floors of the embassy were brought over from Egypt by the Ambassadress. One from ancient times is woven in just two shades, and the reverse side is like needlepoint work. A silk embroidered cloth over the baby grand dates back to the fifteenth century.

Chairs of Mahogany

Egyptian chairs in the entrance hall are solid mahogany, inlaid with mother-of-pearl, and two tall brasiers in the reception room were taken from an old Egyptian temple.

Mme. Abdul Rahim has not redecorated the embassy, but she has put in little touches of her own. "I think a woman changes things," she says, "And I must always change everything." Artistic to her slender fingertips, one can easily believe a change for the better takes place, when Mme. Abdul Rahim takes over.

Daughter of a former Prime Minister of Egypt, the Ambassadress has moved in diplomatic circles all her life. She is petite, and she has a pretty voice and a commanding air. Although she has spent less time at home than abroad, her travels are so frequent she is never long away from Egypt.

Flying Home for Visit

Yesterday the Ambassador and Mme. Abdul Rahim left by plane for a six-weeks' visit at home. They headed directly for Cairo, a trip of 36 hours. But before boarding the plane, they cabled King Farouk congratulations on his thirtieth birthday anniversary.

As a rule, February 11 is a day of great celebration in Egypt. This year as last, however, there were no festivities. As long as the Palestine question remains unsettled, the Egyptians say, there will be no celebrating on the King's birthday.

In Egypt, where they are due to arrive tomorrow, the Abdul Rahims will spend some time at their villa in Helioplis, a modern city in the desert, just eight miles from Cairo. It was founded by a Belgian, the late Baron Empain, who, as a brilliant and enterprising engineer was able to make the desert bloom as the rose. The Helioplis Palace Hotel, a de luxe dream of 1000 rooms, is one of his projects, and the Baron has also left a copy of a beautiful Indian temple which he built for his home.

The Ambassadress has studied painting, and she has a deep love for art and music.

A good neighbor of hers on Sheridan Circle is Mme. Erkin, wife of the Turkish Ambassador. The two knew each other well in Ankara, Turkey, where Mohamed Kamil Bey Abdul Rahim served at the beginning of the war as Chief of Mission. Later the envoy and his wife went to Moscow in the same capacity, and from 1944 to 1947 Mohamed Kamil Bey Abdul Rahim was Undersecretary of State. He came to Washington as Ambassador in September, 1948.

Preceding the meeting, Mme. van Foreest was guest of honor at a luncheon. Other guests included Mrs. William Preston Lane, jr., wife of the Governor of Maryland, and an honorary member of the club; Mrs. Jackson, Mrs. Carlton R. Adams, Mrs. Robert B. Pirie, Mrs. Arthur L. Newman, Mrs. James Reid, Mrs. Henry H. Caldwell, Mrs. C. P. Brady, Mrs. Forsyth Massey, Mrs. Clifton G. Grimes, Mrs. Raymond Swartz, Mrs. Dana B. Cushing, Mrs. William A. Aldridge, Mrs. Myron W. Hutchinson, Mrs. Morton Sunderland, Mrs. John H. Lodbell, Mrs. John Cox, Mrs. Newton W. Buerger, Mrs. William E. Farrell, Mrs. H. A. Baldridge, Mrs. Daniel W. Ryan and Mrs. Hector deZayas.

The fifteenth annual duplicate bridge tournament of the Annapolitan Club is now in progress, with Capt. J. E. M. Wood serving as chairman of the birdge committee. Twenty-seven pairs started play in the tournament on Thursday night, February 2, competing for the three top prizes. Playing will continue each Thursday night during February.

Trinity Methodist Church was the setting for the wedding last Sunday of Miss Shirley Ann Dove, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Edward Dove, to Francis Harwood James, son of Mr. and Mrs. John James, of Mill Creek.

The Rev. Charles Kirkley, pastor, performed the ceremony. Wilbur Miller played traditional wedding music, and Miss Ruth V. Parsons sang "At Dawning."

The bride, given in marriage by her father, had her sister, Mrs. Dorothy Rae Stanley, as matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Mrs. Ruth V. Henretty and Mrs. Shirley Peacock. Benjamin L. Stanley was best man, and the ushers were Frederick J Henretty and Phillip Peacock.

A reception, planned to follow the wedding, was canceled because of the illness of the bride's mother.

Robert Alden Orr, son of the late Dr. and Mrs. W. C. Orr, received his B. S. degree Friday at the graduation exercises at the College of William and Mary. He is now the guest of his brother-in-law and sister, Dr. and Mrs. W. P. Bodmer in Leesburg. He will enter the medical school of the Universiy of Virginia next September.

Mrs. Charles F. Harrison entertained at dinner on Tuesday night at her home in Leesburg, followed by canasta.

Vice Admiral and Mrs. Harvey E. Overesch have returned home after an extended visit in California with their son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. James Castle. The Castles, whose home is in Hawaii, are living temporarily at Sherman Oaks, Calif. Mrs. Castle is the former Miss Emily Overesch.

Mrs. Beatrice C. Munroe this week announced the engagement of her daughter, Mary, to Raymond O. Imler, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Imler of Carrington, N. Dak.

The bride-elect is the daughter of the late Capt. Charles F. Munroe, M. A. R. G., USA. She is a graduate of Annapolis High School and the Annapolis Business College. Mr. Imler, a graduate of Carrington High School in North Dakota, attended the North Dakota State Agricultural College.

Mrs. Christopher Bertelson Nelson of Annapolis and Dr. James Sumner Marshall of New York City have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Rosamond Dale Marshall, to Midshipman Donald Kerry Forbes, son of Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Ellsbury Forbes of Washington, D. C.

Miss Marshall is a graduate of St. Margaret's School in Tappahannock, Va., and attended the Maryland Institute of Art in Baltimore.

Midshipman Forbes, a graduate of Southwest High School in Minneapolis, Minn., served in the Navy for two years during the war prior to his appointment to the Naval Academy. He is now a First Classman and plans are being made for a June wedding in St. Andrew's Chapel in the Naval Academy.

For Thrift Shop Party, Fashion Show

White Elephants Will Parade Through Hitt Mansion Feb. 21

A STRING of "white elephants" will enter stately Hitt Mansion at 1501 New Hampshire ave. nw. Tuesday, February 21, when the Thrift Shop holds its annual white elephant party and fashion show there.

Although tickets will be sold for the event, guests are asked to bring also unwrapped "white elephants"—any item in good condition which is no longer needed or wanted—to the benefit. These items will later go on sale at the Thrift Shop, 809 9th st. nw., which raises money for six children's charities. Money derived from ticket sale will also go for the charities.

The party will be held from 4 to 6 p. m. in the two drawing rooms and the dining room on the second floor. Fashions shows will be from the spring collection of Omar Kiam of Ben Reig, and will be available for the showing through Julius Garfinckel & Co.

Music will be provided by Jack Morton's Orchestra, and there will be refreshments.

The Hitt Mansion itself will be a feature of the event since it is considered an outstanding example of the architectural skill of John Russell Pope. The house was built in 1911. Many art works, tapestries and other treasures collected by the late Mr. and Mrs. Hitt here and in France will be on view. The mansion, which has been closed since the death of Mrs. Hitt a year ago, is being lent for the occasion by Mrs. Hitt's son, William Hitt.

Lecture Will Push Estate Restoration

Another move in the cumulative effort to restore Red Hill, historic Charlotte County (Va.) estate where Patrick Henry died, will be made Thursday, February 16, when the Colonial Dames of America, Chapter III, hold a benefit lecture.

The lecture, on "Patrick Henry and His Contemporaries", will be given by Mrs. O. W. McNeese at the Sulgrave Club. Chapter III of the Colonial Dames has assumed the entire responsibility of raising money to restore the law office which is to be one of the buildings to stand on the estate when it is restored by the Patrick Henry Memorial Foundation. The law office building is still standing but must be moved to its original location, restored to original condition and stocked with the historic books and papers once housed there.

The memorial foundation was organized by a group of Virginia citizens in 1944 under the leadership of James S. Easley, president of the Virginia State Bar Association. The following year some 900 acres of the original Red Hill estate were purchased. Exact measurements and descriptions of the Henry home, which burned to the ground in 1918, and descriptions of the grounds have been gathered so that the restoration may be a true replica of the Red Hill of 1799.

Cardozo-Central High Switch Splits D. C. School Board

By Elsie Carper

THE PROPOSED transfer of Central High School from white to Negro use has greater implications than relief of overcrowding at Cardozo High School.

The relocation of Cardozo to Central will solve for the forseeable future the Board of Education's housing problem for Negro high school youth. It will save the city at least five million dollars in site and construction funds for a new school.

It also will threaten the long range building program of the school board, end for the present plans for the establishment of a city supported junior college and dislocate the city's night school and recreation programs.

The Board of Education is scheduled to vote on the transfer at its meeting Wednesday. A majority of board members already are on record or have stated privately that they will approve the transfer.

The proposal has received support on Capitol Hill from the House Subcommittee on District Appropriations and from Senator Matthew M. Neely (D., W. Va.), chairman of the Senate District Committee.

THE TRANSFER is bitterly opposed by white citizens' associations, the Central Parent-Teacher Association and the Central Alumni Association. Negro groups, in general, have favored the plan which, if approved, will go into effect next September.

Schools Superintendent Hobart M. Corning has recommended against the Central transfer, proposing instead that vacant rooms in the Park View Elementary School be used as a temporary annex to Cardozo until completion in two years of the new Spingarn High School.

Dr. Corning argues that transfer of Central will be permanent and that with Negro students adequately housed school officials will have little justification for seeking funds for new Negro high schools. On the drawing board now are plans for a replacement of Cardozo and a new Armstrong Technical High School.

School board members have made it clear that the Central transfer will be permanent and that they will drop plans for the new five-million-dollar Cardozo.

The new Armstrong may be delayed for years or at least until a time that sufficient schools are built to eliminate part-time and overcrowding in elementary and junior high schools.

Negro school board members who originally held out for temporary use of the Central building while construction was under way on a new Cardozo have now agreed that the transfer be made permanent.

RELOCATION of Cardozo also will relieve board members of one of their biggest worries, charges that they have failed to provide Negro high school youth with educational facilities equal to those granted white students.

Board members already are defendants in one law suit which charges them with failing to provide a standard high school program for Cardozo students.

Dr. Philip Johnson, one of three Negro board members, recently warned his colleagues that additional suits will be filed against them if they turn down the Central transfer.

One of the white board members, speaking off the record, said he favors the Central transfer because he feels that if something is not done immediately at Cardozo the entire concept of the dual school system may be threatened.

If Central is transferred, Cardozo students, now attending classes on a triple shift program and denied standard gymnasium, lunchroom, auditorium, stadium and library facilities, will inherit what School Board President C. Melvin Sharpe has described as "the finest school in every respect we have in Washington."

The nearly 1800 students housed in the antiquated Cardozo, built to house 1000 students, will be moved into the Central building which has space for 2400.

ON THE other side, though, it will disrupt the educational program of the more than 1330 white junior and senior high students now attending Central.

It will deprive the white schools of the largest and most centrally located stadium and of their only swimming pool.

The Central night school, now attended by nearly 1000 persons, will be shut down as will the recreation program which each night draws an average of 300 persons.

The transfer also will postpone indefinitely plans for a public supported junior college. As long as physical facilities were available there was a chance that the board would be able to expand the educational program into the thirteenth and fourteenth year. Dr. George D. Strayer in his survey of District schools recommended such a use of the Central building.

In Arlington and Alexandria

University of Virginia Starting New Courses

By William H. Wranek, Jr.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Feb. 11.—Extension courses in engineering will be taught next week for the first time in the Arlington and Alexandria area as part of the University of Virginia's program of bringing professional studies directly to workers in research laboratories, military establishments, and manufacturing and industrial centers of the Commonwealth.

This engineering extension program was started as something of an experiment 21 years ago. After the war the demand for graduate courses increased. Last year the program was broadened to include courses leading to the master's degree in aeronautical, mechanical, electrical, chemical or civil engineering.

Dr. S. B. Batdorf, upper, with Manuel Stein works at combined testing machine in structures research laboratory. Stein is working toward his master's in aeronautical engineering at the University of Virginia

Last fall, at the opening of second year of graduate courses, enrollment went above this 400 mark, with more than one-fourth of the students taking aeronautical engineering.

Start Next Week

REGISTRATIONS are being completed for the new courses to be taught in northern Virginia. Other graduate courses in chemical engineering are to be started next week in Roanoke, and students will come from the paper manufacturing center around Covington, Va.

Graduate courses offered in the Arlington-Alexandria center will be engineering mathematics, theoretical physics, the design of electronic controls, and advanced engineering mathematics. Undergraduate courses include mathematical analysis, calculus, physics, highways, curves and earthworks, differential equations, mathematics of statistical analysis, physical optics, and preparation of technical reports and letters.

Subjects as diverse as aerodynamics, atomic physics, airplane structures, bridge designing, engineering economics, industrial electronics, naval architecture, highway designing, radio engineering, personnel management, water supply, heat transmission, and process instrumentation are listed among courses offered in the 1949-50 session at other centers.

The Norfolk Naval Shipyard, the Newport News Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., the Naval Proving Ground at Dahlgren, the Virginia Bridge Co., the Norfolk & Western Railway, the Virginia Electric & Power Co., Fort Eustis, Fort Monroe, the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., the Hastings Instrument Co., and other industries and establishments are represented in this year's engineering extension student body.

Economy Goal

EVERY effort is made to keep the program economical, both in time and in money. Tuition fees are $10 for each semester hour. High school classrooms are usually used for late afternoon or evening sessions, though some classes are taught right in the plant or laboratory where the student is working.

During the second summer session in graduate engineering, to be held in the engineering school of the University of Virginia, advanced courses in theoretical aerodynamics, applied mathematics, physics will be taught.

Extension teaching is often done by men who are working in the same establishment with their students. For example, teachers at the Hampton, Va., center are all scientists from the Langley laboratories, men outstanding in their fields.

Some courses in aeronautical engineering are so advanced that they are not regularly offered in technical schools or universities, and there are no textbooks to cover them. Important contributions to science have been made by the publication of two books written by NACA scientists from notes made while teaching graduate courses in aerodynamics.

Brain-Truster Tugwell Now Teacher Abroad

By Harold K. Milks

LONDON (AP).—Rexford G. Tugwell, who once helped run the American Government, now teaches London students about it.

The former top brain truster under President Franklin Roosevelt is a visiting professor at the London School of Economics, lecturing on American Government and political science.

The 58-year-old economist, whose career as a Government planner was constantly stormy, lives quietly today in a London hotel.

He came here on invitation of the London school, settling himself and his family so firmly into the British educational routine that his presence passed almost unnoticed. His two sons are enrolled in a typical country school in Devon.

Back to Chicago

TUGWELL said he expects to return next spring to his regular position as professor of political science at the University of Chicago.

It was Tugwell, sometimes called the most dapper of Roosevelt's top advisers, whose "liberal" ideas went into many projects of the New Deal.

As Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, he was credited with developing the farm parity price formula which became the key to Roosevelt's famous "Triple A" agricultural program in the United States. Many of his plans still are in effect in the American Government's program of supporting farm prices.

Tugwell's last brain trust post was as governor of Puerto Rico. There his career was just as stormy as it had been in Washington. He retired from public life in 1946 to become a professor on the University of Chicago's midway.

Right Around HOME — WE CLEAN OUT THE CLOSET — by Dudley Fisher

AN AD IN THE CLASSIFIED WOULD HAVE SOLD A LOT OF THESE THINGS.

Take a Tip From a Clever Cat

Does this sort of cleaning go on in your home? If you think you'll scream the next time you have to find a place to store one more thing—if you're tired of having things fall on your head when you open closet doors, consider the case of Mrs. G. P. of 25th St. N.W.

Young Master P. decided he was too big for a crib and play pen so he cast them aside, leaving his mother to deal with them. She couldn't waste valuable storage space with them so she turned to a Post want ad for the solution to her problem. In one day she found a Post reader who had use for a crib and playpen and she made a sale. By using a Post want ad, Mrs. P. spared herself storage difficulties and she also received welcome cash for the no-longer-needed furniture.

You, too, can clean out crowded closets, attics, or basements by using Post want ads. It's easy to place Past want ads and you'll find that many Post readers are seeking just the items you have to offer. Tell them about your used furniture or appliances in a Post want ad.

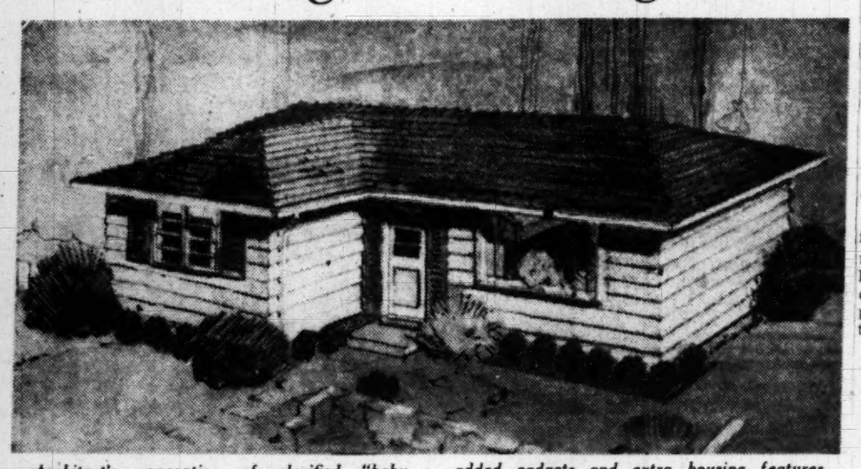
1500-Home Project Sets Pace For Kensington Building Boom



Architect's conception of glorified "baby rambler" planned in Kensington, Md., by Standard Properties, Inc. House will have two bedrooms, fully equipped kitchen, several added gadgets and extra housing features, will sell for under $8000, the lowest sales price offered since war's end by a large-scale Washington builder

The Washington Post

Street scene of brick bungalows completed in Kensington Estates, off County rd., Kensington, Md. Two-bedroom homes, with complete electric kitchen, sold for $9990. The builders plan a spring building program off Viers Mill rd., Md.

By Conrad P. Harness

DRIVE out to the end of Connecticut ave. and you wind up in the heart of Kensington, Md.

The construction boom has caught up with the pretty little community with its village atmosphere.

Busy builders and land developers, finishing up projects in other portions of the metropolitan area and looking for land, have found a new base of operations.

For instance, Standard Properties, Inc., developers of the Eastpines subdivision of more than 400 homes in East Riverdale, Md., have purchased a 327-acre tract in Kensington known as Perry Farms.

On this site, about three blocks north of the Baltimore & Ohio tracks, on Decatur st., the firm has started an immense housing project of 1500 single family houses.

Present plans call for around 200 homes per year to be completed. The schedule can be speeded up to cover a house a day if necesary, according to Clarke Daniel, firm president.

Low Price Tags

ABOUT 60 percent of the first 200 homes will be "glorified baby ramblers" to sell "for under $8000," Daniel stated. At that price he doesn't anticipate any sales problem. Veterans could buy at no down payment and under $55 per month.

Foundations have just been poured for the first house. It will be another two months before model homes are up, he warned interested home seekers. First families are expected to move into completed homes by May 15, he said, provided sewer and water mains have been completed.

"The "baby rambler" will have two bedrooms and a host of glamour items including a Bendix washer, fully equipped kitchen, built-in wall radio, magnetic catches on cabinets, dish spray, door chimes, radiant heating lamp to provide immediate heat in the bath, sliding steel closet doors and automatic warm air heating system.

Forty percent of the first year's output will be a two-bedroom, full basement and expansion attic home to sell for about $10,250. Homes will be varied in exterior construction, but most will be of asbestos shingles plus some with wood siding variations.

Further plans call for construction of higher-priced homes, possibly up to $20,000 on that portion of the tract which touches Rock Creek. The entire section will be called "The Palisades."

Many Prefab Homes

THE prefab industry is well represented in Kensington. Structural Contractors, Inc., are continuing development in the Homewood section, off Capital View ave. "Peaseway Homes," made in Ohio, are under construction there.

A three-bedroom bungalow with equipped kitchen, on a 60-by-110-foot lot, is selling at $10,500, according to the Frederick W. Berens Co., agents. A building program of 99 such houses has been started.

A project of 15 similar prefabricated homes will be started soon off Newport Mill rd. by the same firm, a Berens spokesman added.

Another pre-cut house assembled here is "The Columbian," manufactured in Middleport, N. Y., by Barden & Robeson, Inc., for a local firm, Columbia Industries, Inc.

Two model homes have completed on McComas ave., between Lincoln and Georgia aves. A three-bedroom, no-basement house sells for $10,850 with a two-bedroom at $10,250.

Cooperative Homes Face New Fight In Senate

CAN small-income families, banded together in cooperatives, build cheaper housing than they can buy on the open market?

This is the crux of the question facing the Senate Banking Committee. This group has shelved President Truman's "middle-income" housing bill for two weeks pending further study of the controversial issue.

Housing and Home Finance Agency Administrator Raymond M. Foley, the President's top housing man, has told the House Banking and Currency Committee that cooperative housing costs to the individual families would be less than private enterprise projects.

Lower costs are obtained, he said, through longer term loans, lower interest rates and substantially lower operating expenses due to the more owner participation in project management.

$5000 Challenge

THIS is all "so much bunk," retorts Clarke Daniel, president of the Home Builders Association of Metropolitan Washington. He claims the bill is "being pushed by the Administration as a payoff to rich labor unions, topped by the CIO, and professional lobbyists on the payrolls of some veterans' organizations.

"There has been no grass-roots demand for such a proposal for huge public spending," Daniel adds.

As to cooperative groups being able to build cheaper than private builders, Daniel says Foley is pulling the wool over the voters' eyes.

Daniel is so convinced that the proposed bill is a badly conceived housing measure that last Thursday he challenged Foley to a $5000, one-sided wager.

Low-Cost Ramblers

"IF," said the builder, "under the terms of this proposed housing bill, any cooperative group can build a house similar to those my firm is erecting at Kensington, and not costing any more, my firm will give Mr. Foley a check for $5000 to be presented to his favorite charity.

"All any cooperative must do to allow Mr. Foley to win this $5000 check is to erect a camparable two-bedroom rambler in a good neighborhood at a cost of not over $8000. My house will have fully-equipped kitchen, automatic washer, built-in radio, radiant heat lamp in bath and other extras.

"Here's $5000 that says a cooperative group can't beat private enterprise at its own game. If they can't produce a comparable house at the price, Foley doesn't lost a nickel: just his arguments that private enterprise can't and isn't producing housing for the middle-income groups."

Asked to comment on Daniel's challenge, Foley's office said "no comment." However, a HHFA press officer said Foley had gone into the cost angle thoroughly in his appearance before the House Banking and Currency Committee on January 30.

At that time Foley said that housing cooperatives offer promise as a means of reducing the monthly cost of housing to the individual consumer through the elimination of speculative profits, savings in maintenance and repair, and potential savings in construction.

He estimated that in a sample cooperative rental project, a 4½ room apartment costing $8000 would rent at a monthly gross figure of $64.67. Building costs would be amortized at 3 percent interest over a 50-year period.

Daniel said his firm would sell a five-room house and lot for under $8000, with no down payment to qualified veterans and a monthly payment of not over $55 for 25 years, including taxes, insurance, interest and payment on principle. The $55 did not include utilities.

Foley said a unit comparable to RISING in south Alexandria is the eight million dollar, 795-unit apartment project of Hunting Towers, located along Hunting Creek, within shouting distance of the Potomac River. There will be three 8-story structures. The first, nearest the camera, is expected to be ready for occupancy in August. The others will be completed approximately one month apart after that date. Plans have been drawn for a yacht basin. Exact rental rates have not been set, but have been estimated as: 2 bedroom living room, dining room, kitchen and bath at not over $125 per month; living room, bedroom, bath and kitchen, not over $95; efficiency unit, not over $85. The Federal Housing Administration is insuring a $6,619,800 mortgage on the property. About 15 percent of the 10-acre tract will be occupied by buildings. Middle Income Families Head Buyers of Homes

Families with incomes between $3600 and $4800 a year made up the largest group buying new homes in 1949, according to the National Association of Home Builders.

"New FHA figures for the first six months of 1949 show that 37.5 percent of single-family home purchasers under Section 203 had annual incomes in the $3600—$4800 bracket," Frank W. Cortright, NAHB spokesman, reported.

Next largest group was families with income of less than $3600.

Less than 15 per cent of the new houses were bought by families with incomes of $6000 or over, NAHB said.

"This shows that home builders are meeting the middle income market."

Builder's $5,000 Housing 'Bet' Gets No Action From HHFA Boss

cooperative rental at $64.67 would be $90.32 in rental projects built under section 608 of the National Housing Act. Nearly all of the postwar apartments built in Washington have been erected under mortgage insurance provided by this act.

Foley said cooperative tenants would cut operating costs by performing certain operating and maintenance functions on a self-help basis, particularly painting and redecorating.

Mow Lawns?

IN a speech Thursday before representatives of the building realty and banking groups, Daniel listed 10 points which he said were "bad points" of the proposed bill. One concerned operating facilities:

"Cooperative owners, under this bill, cannot hope for American standards of service, maintenance, recreational facilities and other basic factors enjoyed by private home owners and tenants in private apartments.

"Co-op members will cut their own grass, repair the boiler breaks, sweep their own corridors, haul trash—all things that are automatically provided by the private enterprise system. And, there is always that joker in the woodpile: the guy who never wants to do his share of the work in the co-op. Mr. Foley hasn't mentioned him."

Daniels said Government could best aid in housing middle income groups by increasing the percentage of mortgage insurance on low-cost housing from $6000 maximum to $8000. This would give 95 percent mortgage coverage, with the home buyer paying only 5 percent in cash, with low monthly carrying charges spread out over a 30 to 40 year amortization period.

Co-ops Have Aid

"GROUPS wishing to build housing under the cooperative plan can already take advantage of FHA's aid," Daniels continued. There is legislation on the books directing FHA to provide assistance to cooperatives.

"The Federal National Mortgage Association and the RFC can make direct Federal loans to cooperatives," Daniels added. "As written, the proposed measure will not provide one iota of new housing more than existing legislation already on the books. The new proposal will, however, cost billions more and can put private enterprise out of business."

The two week's breathing spell while the Senate Banking Committee "studies the bill's impact on the national economy" gives the building industry additional time to fight the measure.

"The United States has no need to resort to the socialistic patterns which numerous European countries have turned to in their desperate need for housing," the National Association of Home Builders charged yesterday.

The Mortgage Bankers Association said a study of Swedish cooperatives revealed that they have "not been able to obtain cost reductions sufficient to raise the very low space standards of housing in that country or to account for more than 20 percent of housing production at any one time.

Bill Favored

THE National Association of Real Estate Boards pointed out that the average European family living in a government supervised cooperative pays 20 percent of family income for rent. NAREB quoted Federal Reserve Board figures showing United States families pay only 12½ percent of family income for rent.

Practical Builder magazine charged that Government is steadily wedging into the home building industry and its impact is serious to the public as well as the builder.

The United States Savings and Loan League said proposed preferences in credit terms for cooperative middle income housing make forgotten men out of the Nation's home owners, including 1¾ million veterans' families.

For the other side, the Washington Housing Association said it was "wholeheartedly in favor of the bill." The association's "Housing Letter" said the bill is designed to furnish the two essentials for lower-cost housing: reduced construction and maintenance costs, and lower finance charges.

Editorial Attack

"A REDUCTION in the cost of constructing a group of homes or apartments can be achieved by housing cooperatives through the elimination of the profit feature," the article added. "The co-owners or tenants can cut maintenance costs by doing much of the work themselves."

The February 6 issue of the AF of L's "League Reporter" carried a four-column picture story on how union workers could band together to get housing under terms of the proposed bill.

One panel said: "You move into a two-bedroom $65-a-month apartment in the cooperative. It is just like a $90 apartment in a profit-making project."

An editorial cartoon in the same issue depicted two cigar smoking tycoons, one representing the "real estate lobby," the other "loan company," throwing bricks at a house marked "Middle Income Cooperative Housing." The headline read: "Who Says We're Not Cooperative-minded?"

Governors of the Federal Reserve Board have been asked to give the Senate Banking Committee a report on any inflationary tendency which might be increased by the proposed cooperative housing bill.

Final Senate committee action is expected by March 1.

The Washington Post

Clarke Daniel, president, Home Builders Association, holds $5000 check, a sum he bet HHFA Administrator Raymond Foley. Daniel maintains, $5000 worth, that Government sponsored housing cooperatives can't erect comparable $8000 single family homes to those put up by private enterprise

Row Housing Project Set In Alexandria

Two new housing project are set for Alexandria.

Rosemont Homes, Inc., plans 38 row houses on East Rosemont st. and Mount Vernon ave. A second project of 35 homes in the same area may be built later.

The Rosemont dwellings will have two-bedrooms, with six and seven units in each row. The developers are negotiating with the local VA loan guarantee office for approval of sales prices.

The developers are seeking $9150 to $9750 on homes without basements; $9900 to $10,500 on homes with basements. Banks & Lee is the general contractor.

At Bellefonte ave. and River rd., Builders & Realty Corp. plans a building program of 62 semi-detached brick homes. A building permit has been issued. Ground has not yet been broken.

Each unit in the duplex will have a 16 by 27 foot floor area. Plans have been prepared by John M. Walton & Associates. Prices have not been established.

Fireplace Is Big Factor in Looks Of Living Room

The fireplace, long a symbol of hospitality, serves many a modern home as the decorative center of the living room as well as a source of warmth and cheer.

Home owners whose outmoded fireplaces detract from the living room may find that changing the appearance of the hearthside will provide a face-lifting for the whole room. Here are some suggestions for converting the misfit fireplace into a decorative asset:

Be sure the fireplace is in proportion to room and furniture. If it dwarfs the rest of the room, try lowering the mantel and replacing it with an inset mirror. A shadow-box above the fireplace provides a clean, modern line and a niche for flower vases or porcelain pieces. If the decor permits it, a colonial type cupboard of one or two shelves above the fireplace makes a showplace for antique plates, candlesticks and adds a "cozy" touch.

Clay tile, traditional fireplace surfacing, is available in 200 shades. This means fireplace borders can be had in colors to suit any taste or decor. An old fireplace can be given a modern sweep by restricting the tiled border to a foot or two on one side and extending it several feet or even the length of the wall on the other. A too formal, austere-looking fireplace can be given a more comfortable look by built-in cabinets.

These 10 million loans represent that number of repair or modernization project under the FHA Title I Plan with total loans amounting to approximately four billion dollars.

The loss on Title I loans amounts to about 1 percent of the net proceeds of all loans insured. Since mid-1939 FHA has charged a premium for insurance of these loans and at present the Title I program is self-supporting.

Application for the ten millionth loan of $375 was for installation of a heating plant in a Newport home.

Home Hints

GRANDFATHER will always insist that the winters of the 1940s are much milder than the winters they had back in the '70s when he was a boy. Whereas we wouldn't want to argue with grandfather, the chances are that there has not been much of a prevailing temperature difference between the winter seasons of 70 years ago and those of today. The winters of grandfather's boyhood just seemed to be colder than those of today because of the vast difference between the heating systems of then and now.

Grandfather's boyhood home was probably heated either by open fireplaces or by a pot-bellied parlor stove. Etched deep in his memory is the recollection of having to jump out of bed on a bitter cold morning and lash shiveringly downstairs to dress in front of the stove. It was a common indoor winter experience in those days to feel well roasted on that side of you which faced the stove while your other side shivered.

Contrast this experience with the modern method of arising on a winter morning. By merely flipping the thermostatic control of 70 degrees or more, the entire house is soon permeated with a pleasant feeling of comfortable warmth. Dressing can be done leisurely with no shivers. Credit for this modern morning experience can be given to the discovery of central heating methods whereby heat from a central heating source is distributed to every room in the house.

Research Underway

THE MODERN heating system with its automatic fuel burning and temperature controlling equipment is as far removed from the fireplace and space-heating units of our ancestors as the modern automobile is from the ox cart.

Because the central heating system nowadays is an integral part of the home in which it is installed, most home owners are inclined to take it pretty much for granted. However, according to the National Warm Air Heating and Air Conditioning Association, as the development of central heating systems outmoded the old space-heating methods, so a new concept of heating among heating engineers has already started to revolutionize central heating methods.

This concept originated as a result of continuous testing of heating systems under actual family living conditions in special research residences built by the National Warm Air Heating Association at the University of Illinois. Association researchers discovered that it is possible to adequately heat a house, yet the house will not be comfortable to the occupants.

Humidity Is Big Factor

THIS discovery precipitated an entire trend in warm air heating research; namely, the development of equipment which will provide indoor comfort. Heating is merely one phase of producing comfort. Among the other conditions of air treatment which influence the wintertime comfort environment of a house are proper air circulation, adequate humidity, air freshness, freedom from staleness, and air cleaning by means of filters.

"Seven Steps to Indoor Comfort" describes the many factors of winter air conditioning which the home-builder will want to consider when planning for the installation of a home-heating system in his new home. This booklet may be obtained by writing to the National Warm Air Heating and Air Conditioning Association, 145 Public Square, Cleveland 14, Ohio. Price is 10 cents per copy.

Gabled Roofs Win in Bremen

Bremen, Germany (AP).—Every once in a while the Germans show signs of rebelling against the bureaucracy that has plagued them since long before Adolf Hitler's days. That makes American occupation officials happy.

A case that encourage the Americans was Bremen's "battle of the gables." The Bremen Board of Control of Building Affairs decided that new buildings in the business district should not have gabled roofs. A lively public discussion followed, with Bremen's architects, art experts and ordinary citizens protesting.

Carl Ronning, a coffee merchant, defied orders and built a gabled roof. Authorities ordered him to tear it down. That really stirred up public reaction. And the ban on gables was rescinded.

A Case of Justifiable Homicide, No Doubt

Rush, N. Y. (AP).—"Please let me use the phone so I can report a fire," farmer William Yahn shouted to users of his party line.

"We're talking and you'll just have to wait," Yahn said one of the women on the line told him. Yahn said his alarm was delayed five minutes. Flames had all but leveled both his barns when firemen arrived.

Flower Show For Area Due Mar. 23 to 29

"The greatest flower show ever held in the Washington area" is planned for the National Guard Armory from March 23 through 29, Mrs. Emmanuel Perry, chairman, reports.

She spoke last week at the Armory before 120 representatives of area garden clubs participating in the first National Flower and Garden Show ever to be held in Washington. Both commercial and private exhibitors have been invited to participate.

Other speakers included Executive Committee Vice Chairman Edward Bender and Dr. Conrad Link of the University of Maryland. Dr. Link said one section of the Armory will be designated as "The Avenue of Information."

Educational exhibits will be presented by the Potomac Rose Society, National Capital Dahlia Society, National Tulip Society, Department of Agriculture and the University of Maryland's horticulture department.

Thirteen colleges, some from Montana and Georgia, will have three-man teams participating in the flower judging contests. Dr. Link said this was the first time that such a large number of colleges will be represented in a national flower show.

Tickets at 85 cents advance price are available from florists, garden club members and flower show headquarters at 721 10th st. nw.

Keep Your Distance

In operating a spray gun which contains paint, varnish or lacquer, always spray at right angles to the surface. Keep the gun at the same distance from the surface at all times. Tis distance should be approximately 8 inches.

Product Previews

A NEW type of fire protection against home fires is now available. It is an alarm-and-detection unit manufactured by International Morse Products of Cleveland. The thermal units, small enough to fit in the palm of your hand, are placed in every room. If for any reason the temperature rises above 150 to 160 degrees, the alarm goes off.

Other new products on preview include the following:

Westinghouse Electric Corp. at East Springfield, Mass., is helping kids get a drink of water. Its "small fry fountain" is mounted halfway down the side of a regular water cooler. Turn on the water bubbler to get a drink for yourself, and your child can drink at the same time.

A three-way mop with a scraper brush on one side and a squeegee on the other is made by the Minute Mop Co. of Chicago. You can mop, scrape and squeegee at the same time.

Another way to sweep-mop a floor is with a device distributed by Walter G. Legge Co., Inc., of New York. It's a dampened cloth fitted around a broom element. The brush holds the cloth against the floor to sweep up grit and other materials left behind by dry sweeping with a regular broom. The handle can be turned at any angle to permit cleaning difficult corners or under machinery.

Kaiser Aluminum & Chemical Sales, Inc., of Oakland, Calif., now provides aluminum clapboard siding prepainted in white, cream or gray. The siding is spray painted and baked to give a long lasting finish, the company says, and it can be repainted later with regular household paint.

Hook up your home street number to the doorbell to light it up at night. That's what Nutone, Inc. of Cincinnati, does with a bulb that lasts a year and burns at a cost of 1 to 1½ cents a month.

An oil can that looks like a pen with a visible oil reservoir comes from the Gaunt Industries of Chicago. It has a long needle-like spout designed for use by model railroaders, on typewriters and sewing machines, and by sportsmen and repairmen working on delicate machinery.

Vacuum Concrete, Inc. of Philadelphia has developed a new process for making prefabricated sections for building concrete structures as tall as 15 stories "with the same quality on completion as if they had been cast in one piece." The company says there is a substantial saving through casting the concrete sections of the building in wooden forms and then assembling the building rather than erecting wooden forms for casting the entire structure.

A champagne cork made of rubber is used by Robinson-Lloyds Ltd. of New York, makers of New York State champagne. The rubber stopper looks like a conventional cork used in champagne bottles, but if you open a bottle and change your mind you can put the rubber cork back in, something you can't do with a cork cork.

Pearl-Wick Corp. of Long Island City, N. Y., is producing a new type of laundry hamper which is ventilated with 15,000 tiny vents for air circulation. It is made from a fiber woven on an all-metal frame providing an interior clear of obstructions to prevent snagging. The company plans to market the hamper this spring.

A new shatter-resistant mirror to meet safety requirements in public washrooms, hotels and housing developments is being made by the Conroy-Prugh Glass Co. of Pittsburgh.

The company says the mirror has four to five times the resistance to impact as conventional plate glass. When it is broken, it disintegrates into small granules that the company says are harmless. The mirrors are installed with a theft-proof hanger.

Setting fire to the curtains has been made very difficult by the Owens-Corning Fiberglass Corp. of New York and Knoll Associates of New York who jointly developed a first resistant wool-glass fabric for curtains. The fabric also resists moisture and dust tends to remain on the surface of the material. Dry cleaning is seldom required and doesn't affect the fire-resistant qualities. The fabric is woven from Owens-Corning fiberglass and wool and is marketed by Knoll.

A remote control unit designed to operate any video set from a distance up to 50 feet has been put on the market. It turns the set on, tunes in stations, controls contrast and brightness and turns the set off. The lazy man can relax in his comfortable easy chair and switch stations at will. Distributed in this area by Transvision of Maryland, 1913 N. Charles st., Baltimore, Md.

6000 to Attend Home Builders' Convention

Chicago will become the world capital of home building next Saturday as the annual convention of the National Association of Home Builders gets under way.

More than 6000 men in the housing industry will attend, including 75 fro mthe Washington chapter. The local delegation will be led by Clarke Daniel, association president.

Topics slated for discussion and demonstration include better mortgage financing, more veterans' housing, new angles on design, planning, lighting, heating, decorating and home equipment, land planning, and development of superior neighborhoods.

Also, new materials and products, markets analysis, development of rental housing and climatic conditions as related to home construction.

The meeting will be from February 18 through 23, with a trade showing of home building materials and equipment opening February 19. The largest single exhibit of building materials and new products ever staged will be shown.

The meeting will be covered daily in The Washington Post by Conrad P. Harness, real estate editor.

Madison Manor Homes

Madison Manor, Inc., will build four two-story and basement brick homes at 977-81-85-89 N. Potomac st., Arlington, according to a building permit just issued.

West Coast Man Proposes Nickel Split to Save Money

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—A West Coast businessman proposes saving the public eight billion dollars a year by splitting the nickel.

Edward W. Mehren suggests two new coins—a 2½-cent Ben and 7½-cent Linc.

The saving is the estimated amount lost annually through overpricing and penny breakage because prices have a habit of jumping a full nickel at a time.

Today there are several bills before Congress calling for various fractional coins. Mehren is trying to pull all the forces together back of the 2½-cent Ben (for thrifty Benjamin Franklin) and the 7½-cent Linc (for Abraham Lincoln).

A lot of businesses are caught in the nickle-dime price squeeze. Bens and Lincs would make changes more gradual, permit closer pricing and the use of fewer coins. In a lot of cases where an article is 7 cents, you throw down a dime and walk away—taking a 3-cent loss. Or the price is made a convenient dime instead of 7 cents to begin with—a 3-cent overcharge.

Add all of that up, says Mehren, and it amounts to eight billion dollars a year that we are paying for nothing. Spend that amount on other goods and services, and it would give a terrific boost to our economy, it is argued.

Broyhill Lists 110 New Homes For Fairfax

M. T. Broyhill & Sons, Arlington building firm, has purchased ground off Annandale rd., Fairfax County, for early construction of 110 homes, it was learned yesterday.

Further plans call for 600 homes in Fairfax County, M. T. Broyhill said. Negotiations for more land are under way.

The Annandale site is about one mile from Lee blvd. Sales price of homes will be around $10,000. Construction will start as soon as weather permits.

The homes to built on the newly purchased ground will be exactly like the 3-bedroom brick home planned for a 200 acre tract off New Hampshire ave. ext., near University lane. Six hundred homes will rise there. Preparation of ground has begun.

The home will have three bedrooms, equipped kitchen, set on a concrete slab.

The Broyhill firm plans a 1950 building program of approximately 1500 homes to be started in the greater Washington area.

WHAT kind of a house do most people build? Where do they build it, and how much does it cost?

Answers to these and similar questions are important to everyone planning a new home, as well as to builders and architects.

In an attempt to obtain factual information, the Small Homes Guide of Chicago recently sent questionnaires to all persons who had inquired about various aspects of building new homes and received answers from 11,251.

These replies upset many suppositions, but also confirmed some of the guesses on which architects and builders have been operating.

For example, one-story houses without expansion attics but built over full basements proved the most popular. Small houses with only two bedrooms outnumbered those with three bedrooms, contrary to theories about needs for family growth. One bathroom was the rule and stall showers were not favored.

Frame construction was found to outrank masonry by more than 3 to 1. And, most surprising less than a third of the new home owners did none of the work themselves. In 33.6 percent of the projects the owner did most of the work. Another 25.2 percent reported the owner having done some of the work, and in 12.8 percent of the jobs the owner built the house himself, doing all of the work.

Half Acre Lots

ALTHOUGH the average new house cost $11,699, the bulk of those replying in this survey reported incomes of less thas $5000. Although the average lot size was 18,820 square feet—nearly half an acre—most of the homes were built in small towns, suburbs and cities, and only 25.7 percent in the country.

The poll showed that:

70.3 percent of those replying had new homes in various stages of planning, construction and completion.

13.8 percent bought old houses.

8.3 percent bought new ready-built homes.

2.4 percent were remodeling homes.

3.8 percent dropped their plans to build or buy.

1.4 percent were builders, carpenters, architects and students.

While the cost of the new homes averaged $11,699, those who bought new ready-built homes spent an average of only $10,642. The cost of the new homes built or being built could be classified as follows:

17.3 percent below $6000.

25.8 percent from $6000 to $10,000.

34.1 percent from $10,000 to $15,000.

22.8 percent more than $15,000.

In this connection the income range of the families was interesting. Only 9.9 percent reported incomes below $3000. The majority, 53.7 percent had incomes between $3000 and $5000, while 36.4 percent earned more than $5000.

THE two-bedroom house ruled in 41.6 percent of the projects. Three bedrooms were provided in only 37.1 percent of the cases, while only 9.4 percent of the houses had four bedrooms.

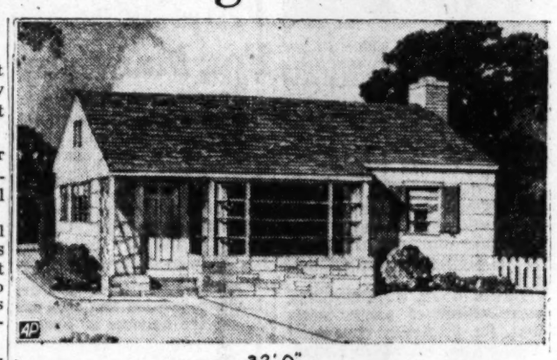
Separate dining rooms were provided in only 43.6 percent of the homes.

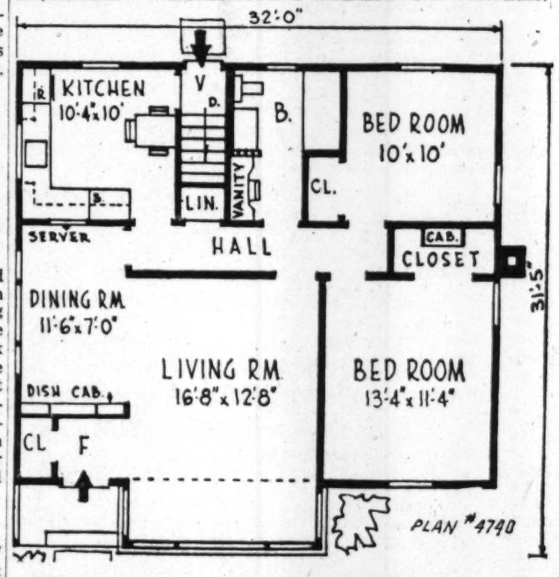
The swing away from two-story houses was noticeable, with only 14 percent in this category, while 53 percent of the families had preferred one-story homes and 30.1 percent one-and-a-half stories.

Basementless construction failed to make the showing one might expect from the glamour enjoyed by radiant heating. Only 31.4 percent of the new houses were built without basements, while 51.4 percent had full basements and 13.8 percent built with part basements—generally considered more expensive. (3.4 percent did not answer this question.)

Lumber apparently is still the predominant American building material. Straight frame construction was used for 64.9 percent of the houses, solid masonry in only 20.4 percent and masonry veneer on frame in 14.2 percent.

Lumber also monopolized exterior wall construction, with 43.9 percent reporting the use of lumber siding, 18.7 percent using some brick on exteriors, 12.4 percent using stucco, 6.4 percent using stone veneer, 12.7 percent siding with wood shingles and only 5.6 percent using concrete walls.





PLANNED TO FIT the preferences of the majority of 11,251 families replying to a poll by the Small Homes Guide, this plan demonstrates what most people want in a house. It is Design 4740 by Herman York, architect, 199-33 Keno ave., Hollis 7, N. Y. The house covers 930 square feet and has a content of 18,376 cubic feet with basement

He has been manager for the past two years of the 35-story David Stott office building in Detroit. Prior to that he had been active in Washington in operating several large buildings.

Construction activity in January began 1950 at a record pace, reports the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Total value of new construction put in place during January, estimated at 1.5 billion dollars was 16 percent above the same month of 1949.

PERSONALS: Our thanks to Tony Denice of Pomponio Realty, Inc., and Scott R. Brewer, jr., of Allied Realty, Inc., for their kind words . . . Congratulations to J. Wesley Buchanan on opening of his new Arlington office in the Radio Building near courthouse square. His old location on Columbia pike was too small for his large business. Every minute in this country 2 houses are built, 7 babies are born and 10 autos produced, reports the National Association of Home Builders. Further, says NAHB, the life expectancy of a modern house is 100 years.

Federal Security Agency says life expectancy of a person is 66.8 years. Automobile Manufacturers Association reports the life of the average car is 8.4 years.

The two houses built every minute have a total use of 200 years points out NAHB, and the 10 automobiles built every minute have a total use value of 84 years.

"Our housing production, in terms of its use value in years, is undoubtedly greater than that of any other product in modern times or in all history," NAHB modestly claims.

Two large regional conferences on mortgage financing and related trends will be sponsored this year by the Mortgage Bankers Association of America. The first will be at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, February 23-24; the second at the Commodore Hotel, New York, April 10-11.

New Housing Projects Set For Maryland

There is a 8-by-10-foot Thermopane insulated window.

The builders plan one project of 18 homes, with negotiations under way for another 16 in the same area. They are also bidding on contracts to erect the same type of house in large numbers for undisclosed investors here.

Public reaction to Kensington area housing has been fine, report the builders of Kensington Estates, a new subdivision of 238 bungalows off County rd. and Highway 547.

The builders, A. Campitelli, Inc., and Brisker & Korth, Inc., are sold out. A two-bedroom brick house with all-electric kitchen and full basement sold for $10,900. Plans are in progress for new housing projects off Viers Mill rd. by the same firms.

The Truden Co., Inc., is finishing a project of 43 new asbestos-shingle bungalows off Wheaton rd. selling at $8990. A new project of $10,000 to $11,000 homes is planned by the same firm on a 50-acre tract just off Old Georgetown rd., fronting on Bells Mill rd., in the northern section of Bethesda, Md.

Steel Price Boost May Not Pass To Buyer Level

New York, Feb. 11 (AP).—Signs multiply that a big part of the recent boost in steel prices never will reach the consumer.

It will be absorbed somewhere between steel mill and retail salesroom before you lay your money on the line for the final product.

This will be done because manufacturers of articles using steel—and there are thousands, from pins and needles to automobiles and locomotives—are finding it difficult to pass higher costs along to their customers.

It's a matter of competition. Many producers are taking a smaller profit rather than stir up sales resistance that would trim their rate of output.

It takes some time for any price increase on a basic material to find its way through all manufacturing and distributing levels. But there is no doubt that some of the higher steel prices are being passed along at various stages of the route.

Dayton Corp. Buys College Park Hotel

Howard Dayton Hotels Corp., formerly of Daytona Beach, Fla., has purchased the 45-room Lord Calvert Hotel at College Park, Md., and plans immediate construction of a 40-room addition to the main building, plus a bar, tap room, dining room and banquet hall.

The corporation plans to maintain offices in College Park. Plans for purchase or lease of additional hotels in and about Maryland are under study.

Washing House May Postpone Repainting Job

Periodic repainting of a house is a good protective investment. But soiled or discolored exterior paint, if otherwise good, can usually be restored by washing, saving the expense of repainting. Choose a mild, clear day for the work.

Equipment includes an extension ladder; scrub brush; pails to hold lukewarm water; plain soap and a prepared paint-cleaning powder.

Clear window and door frames first. Water drip stains should be scrubbed vigorously with a solution of one cup of trisodium phosphate in a pail of hot water, then rinsed with clear water.

Use plain warm water and soap to remove ordinary stains on the walls. For soot or heavy dust stains, use a paint-cleaning powder dissolved in water.

Begin with the lower portion of the wall and work upward, to avoid streaks made by dirty water running down over the old soiled area. Drips of dirty water on the clean, damp lower area wipe off easily.

Clean walls evenly and a small area at a time, to avoid spotting. With garden hose, rinse off remains of soap or cleaner, which may discolor the paint.

Scientific Firm Plans Silver Spring Building

Fisher Scientific Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., has announced plans to build a two-story building at 7722 Woodbury dr., Silver Spring. The structure will boast a floor area of 231 by 201 feet.

Bids from local contractors will be opened February 23. Rhees E. Burket is the architect.

15-Unit Apartment

A three-story, 15-unit apartment building is planned for erection at 1516 Marion st. nw. by Aiken & Davis, owners and builders. A building permit application has been filed.

New Shopping Center

Land at Wisconsin ave. and Western ave., just over the District Line in Bethesda, Md., will be used as a shopping center under plans in progress by the owners, Chevy Chase Land Co. The site is across from the $1,500,000 building underway by Woodward & Lothrop.

Apartment Planned

Free Properties will erect a six-unit apartment building at 1254 Kenilworth ave. ne., according to a building permit application.

D. C. Building Permits Down

Building volume in the District, as measured by permits issued by the District inspector's office, was down one million dollars last month from December, 1949, operations.

Estimated value of projects for which permits were issued during January totaled $5,741,503, against $6,626,300 for December, 1949. But last month's total still topped the $3,517,000 in January, 1949, operations.

Permits were issued for 56 detached houses, two semidetached, 373 apartment units and three row-type homes for a total of 434 housing units.

Geographically the units were distributed: Northeast, 70; Southeast, 314; Northwest, 50, and Southwest, 0.

University Park Homes Permit Been Issued

Polinger Construction Corp. has been issued a building permit for 23 rambler type brick homes on College Heights dr., in University Park, Md. Homes will have a floor area of approximately 43 by 30 feet. Owner is University Park Homes, Inc.

19 Ramblers Started

A building program of 19 three-bedroom brick ramblers in Silver Spring, Md., has been started by Stewart Bainum Co. One group will be located in Indian Spring Village. A second group will be near Old Bladensburg rd. and Carroll ave., according to Raffell Realty Co., agents.

Mississippi Island To Be Factory Site

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Feb 11 (AP).—A giant industrial center some day will rise from a historic island in the middle of the Mississippi River.

Right now the site is just another big pile of sand. But plans call for the biggest riverfront industrial development between Minneapolis and New Orleans.

The plan is called the Tennessee Chute Harbor Project. It is on and around Presidents Island, 5 miles long, 2½ miles wide and covering 7200 acres—one of the river's largest.

The task involves taming a part of the mighty river into slack water; it means moving thousands of tons of sand, silt and mud nearly a mile.

Presidents Island, laden with legend, is 4 miles below downtown Memphis. Its east bank is only a few hundred yards off the Tennessee shore. The water between the mainland and the island is called Tennessee Chute.

Until 1904 the chute was old man river's main channel, but he gave it up to go around the Arkansas side of the island.

Taxpayers Pay Bills

THE 22-million-dollar project was authorized by Congress in the Flood Control Act of 1946. Its purpose is dual—to provide Memphis thousands of acres of additional industrial sites and to improve flood control works and navigation aids.

If the flow of congressional appropriations is sufficient, it is believed the project can be completed in three working seasons.

Several years ago city fathers found practically every inch of available space for industry had been occupied.

A plan was developed and presented to the Government. The project, termed the "greatest undertaking ever planned" for Memphis, calls for an industrial site 2000 feet wide and nearly 4 miles long, paralleling the island's sheltered east bank.

So the site will be floodproof, the Corps of Engineers is building it up to a level higher than any recorded river stage. The fill material is being taken from what in time will be the channel for boats to dock at the island.

One-Season Operation

DREDGING operations began in June, 1948. Since then about 3,600,000 cubic yards of fill already have been piped from the channel to the factory site. A dredge boat is chewing away 24 hours a day, trying to get as much done as possible before the high-water season arrives.

Start of the first phase of the project, a closure dam to shut off "The Chute" from the main channel, was delayed because Congress couldn't agree on funds. Then, too, the water began rising. The dam must be built in one season as the river gets mighty temperamental in the spring.

Besides the closure dam, the industrial fill and the channel, other phases of the huge project will include a $3,630,000 protective levee and a $1,350,000 sewer extension from the mainland.

When the engineers finish, the industrial site and its approaching channel for river transportation will be turned over to the Memphis and Shelby County Harbor and Port Commission. That body will develop the site.

Mile-Long Beach

THE CLOSURE dam carrying the roadway and rail lines leading to the factory sites will be paved and sodded. Streets will be laid out and utilities—electric, gas and water—will extend their services to the island.

And, as a result of the project, Memphis may get a 1000-acre island playground. The piece of land between the chute and the man-made channel, some supporters say, could be developed into an ideal resort—a mile-long sandy beach and a clear, serene lake for boating.

What of the project's economic aspects? One expert says the estimated freight savings on additional waterborne commerce attracted to Memphis "may reasonably" be expected to amount to nearly $1,500,000 a year.

ECONOMY PLUS is a feature of this house that can be built with or without a basement. If a basement is used, the heater room becomes a large closet. Unusual window treatment, flower boxes and low lines distinguish the design. This is Plan 4630 by L. A. Rauscher, 144 Himrod st., Brooklyn 21, N. Y. Graham Gets Texas Job

John H. Graham, Washington architect, has been commissioned to draw up plans for a 12-story, 334 unit apartment house in Fort Worth, Tex., according to news received here last week.

Survey Discloses Housewives Prefer Color in Kitchens

The all-white kitchen may soon join the buggy and gaslight as a relic of the past. Today's housewife wants color in her kitchen, according to a survey of homemakers' kitchen color preferences.

About 77 percent of housekeepers questioned on a Nation-wide poll by color engineer Howard Ketcham named colors other than white as their kitchen choice. Yellow was first choice of 17.9 percent, 15 percent selected blue green, 13 picked gray, and 8 percent chose green.

Surrounded by colors of her own choosing and aided by such work savers as electric dishwashers, easy-to-clean tile walls and step-saving layout, today's housekeeper should run her kitchen more efficiently and enjoyably than her mother and grandmother, Ketcham says.

Another Chicago Mansion Wrecked

Chicago (AP).—The tide of time is washing away an old Chicago landmark.

The Potter Palmer mansion on Lake Shore dr., once the citadel of the city's society, will be torn down soon. Two 22-story apartment buildings will be erected on the site.

With Built-in Candy Bar

New Movie House Opening

By Richard L. Coe

THIS WEEK ADDS one more to the 70-odd neighborhood theaters in our sprawling area.

In "The Second Biggest City of Maryland," Silver Spring, you'll find the 1016-seat Flower, opening Wednesday night with Bob Hope's "The Great Lover." This will be the seventh in the K-B chain and there's another readying to open at Columbia rd. and 17th st., the Paramount.

The "Nabes," as the trade has them, always have been good business, but especially since the war they've taken a great surge ahead. The magnates view the downtown palazzos as showcases, spots for a special evening out or haunts of the Washington tourists. But the "Nabes" have it when it comes to solving the parking problems and the ultimate in comfort.

The Flower, for instance, at Piney Branch rd. and Flower ave., will have easy parking space for 600 cars, with no need for backing and scratching that new fender. One-way alleys will make getting in and out a lot easier.

Two Private Rooms

IN COMMON with another K-B house, the Apex, the Flower will boast two upstairs soundproofed rooms that provide answers to both the sitter problem and the dinner guests who don't like canasta.

One of these is a nursery, which has 21 seats where parents and small fry can make all the caterwauling they please behind a glass window, double-paned to prevent distortion. The walls are colored with cartoons and there's space behind the chairs for the small fry to cavort, thus saving sitter expense at home.

The other will be the Maryland Room, where the same number of adults can be accommodated at private parties. There's plenty of space behind those chairs for the largest sized groaning board any hostess may wish to set up and there's nothing to stop you from bringing your own bottles.

Both these rooms have been big hits at the Apex, where bookings make it possible for the sleekest downtown hits to be viewed by those who can't find baby-sitters. One of the regular patronesses of the Embassy Room in the Apex is Mrs. Joseph E. Davies, who frequently brings on her dinner guests to watch the movies in lofty style. It's cheaper than running off your own movies (you get the rooms to yourself by paying the entrance fee of each guest) and there's rather a special air about the whole thing.

Downstairs the new Flower (named for its location, Rivoli, Gem and Rialto being old hat in movie names) has a crisp, simple modern look. There are 968 seats on the lower floor, the chairs are the ultimate in sliding comfort ($19.95 apiece from the factory) and there's the area's first built-in candy bar.

Talking with K-B's general manager, Frank Boucher, you learn the chain's given serious attention to the area's most frequently heard squawk—"Why not show some good movies on Saturday nights?"

"Saturday nights are as sure a night as the movies can get," Boucher explains. "It's always been the night for movie-going, though Friday and Sunday are both pretty good around here now. But it's the percentage a house has to pay for a picture that can determine just what picture it will play. Sometimes it's necessary to play a modestly budgeted film rental on the weekends to carry the theater for the week.

"We in the K-B chain have always tried to avoid this tradition. We try to play the best pictures there are on our weekends and from the success we've had, I think it's been worth the expense. Because we've gotten good will and regular customers as a result.

"And, make no mistake about it, good will is vastly important in running a theater. That's why we're having a tie-in with the Silver Spring merchants every week. We want the folks in this neighborhood to like us and always to think of us when they decide to go to the movies."

Natural Magnet

SILVER SPRING has three other theaters, newest and largest of which is the Warner chain's 10-year-old Silver. Boucher thinks the shopping center that surrounds his new house is a natural magnet for the area.

Has this been a quick development for the Kogod-Burka firm? Not by a long sight.

The chain got started modestly nearly 25 years ago with the Princess at 12th and H sts. ne., still part of the set-up. The Naylor, Atlas, Senator came in, then the Apex, at 48th and Mass ave. nw., and the MacArthur, which is operated jointly with the Warner chain.

After a survey of the area, the Piney Branch property was settled on six years ago, but only last fall was construction started. All told, it's taken over $275,000 to get the house ready for Wednesday night's opening, but once the Flower starts blooming, it's likely to have a long happy life.

Television? Sure, they've got a set in the lounge and no worries about competition. The folks always have liked to go out, figure these big-wallet investors, so they'll probably continue to. Especially to such a nice-looking Flower.

THE MADWOMEN: Estelle Winwood, Martita Hunt and Nydia Westman, three of an astonishing quartet of ladies in "The Madwoman of Chaillot," opening a week's run tomorrow night at Ford's Theater, Baltimore. The Jean Giraudoux fantasy, veteran of a year's New York run, is on the Theater Guild-American Theater Society subscription series

Sesqui Music Chief Faces A Big, Tough 1950 Job

By Paul Hume

A FEW weeks ago we wrote rather warmly in this column about the tardiness of Sesquicentennial officials in arranging for adequate musical presentations during the coming celebrations.

They have recently done much and well to atone for previous omissions. They have named a director of music who is eminently qualified for such a responsible post.

Emerson Meyers is widely known in Washington and beyond its limits as a sound musician of high standards. His own compositions, his piano playing, his teaching, and his arranging of concerts under the sponsorship of more than one Washington university mark his ability in two fields.

They show his sound ability and art as a critical performer of music. They also show him to be a good planner. His administrative ability was demonstrated last year when he directed the National Symphony Orchestra's nineteenth annual financial campaign to its successful goal of $190,000.

EMERSON MEYERS

Biggest Yet

NOW Meyers has the biggest job of his career. He is responsible for all so-called professional music to be heard during our Capital's 150th birthday observance. (The two fields in which he is not directly connected are those of the symphonic drama under Paul Green, and the arranging of amateur high school bands and choruses. These groups are being secured by a Mr. Stewart of Purdue University. Stewart will, however, keep Meyers advised of his plans.)

Because of the breadth and scope of his interests musically, and his acquaintance with the local scene, Meyers is well able to handle his job. But there are problems which face him in which he must have the solid backing of his commissioners.

Adequate Budget

IN THE first place, he must be assured of an adequate budget to provide the proper amount and kind of music. There will be symphony concerts, solo recitals, ballets, religious and secular choral concerts, and folk music.

There will be organ recitals and music by some of the leading popular artists of our country. There should be special musical events of many kinds for, and by, children. There should be frequent appearances by some of the great musical figures of our present concert world.

The greater part of the music can come from Washington's own musical organizations. We have in our city one of the greatest choral bodies in America in the new combined Washington and Cathedral Choral Societies. We also have outstanding church choirs and choral organizations.

Our symphony orchestra is able to handle any festival assignments. But should we, properly enough, wish to add some broader festival note from time to time, the National Symphony, summer strength, should be augmented.

Coordinating Job

IN ADDITION to scheduled musical events, Meyers' office will be responsible for music to be presented in conjunction with other activities. Should the cornerstone of an important national landmark be laid here during the course of the Sesqui, there will be appropriate music on hand to enhance the day; it will be channeled through the office of the director of music of the Sesqui.

Thus Meyers hopes that all Washington's musicians and musical organizations will let him know their abilities and willingness to help. Our concert halls, particularly those giving weekly free concerts, can expect more than their regular summer visitors. Musicians from all over the country will be coming here and could be invited to perform.

Needs Able Help

TO THIS end, we urge that Meyers surround himself with the very best musical experience and advice he can find in the city so that the best talent can be placed in each niche. Grand ol' opry has its place, and a big one, in the coming days. But it must be good. No less is true in the fields of variety shows, popular music, and all the rest.

Cuts 'Em Fine

Hope Skates Close, but Never Spills

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

NO TEAM of skilled writers can whittle out better lines and phrases, even after chain-smoking, brain-sweating, file-searching hours of work, than Bob Hope can ad lib every time at the right time. Stepping off the plane in Alaska last Christmas, he looked out at the huddle of crease-faced, red-eyed, purple-nosed GIs who guard our Forgotten Front—their lips cracked into expectant smiles as they waited for Bob's always famous first words:

"Be happy, you guys, be proud—brace up—you know who you are, don't you? God's Frozen People!"

And the show was on! Bob has a genius for skating near a hole and never falling in—at a wartime dinner in Washington, the guest of honor was President Roosevelt. Mrs. Roosevelt was a special target for wisecracks that year . . . the audience waited for a topper from Bob. Skillfully he felt his way until the time was right and then he solemnly apologized for a joke he had told a friend earlier that day:

"You know the one—Roosevelt and Churchill met on a battleship in the middle of the Atlantic to figure out where they could fight the war, so they could keep Eleanor out of the crossfire . . . "

Every eye flashed to President Roosevelt, to take a cue from his reaction—he was doubled up laughing, wiping his eyes, and pounding the table with his cigarette holder!

The Roof Rocked

IN BERLIN'S Opera House, the Christmas after Truman beat Dewey, with Vice President Barkley in the audience, and the cold war at the boiling point outside, Bob ad libbed a crack that rocked the roof harder than any air raid ever had:

"I guess the only way a Republican will ever get into the White House now . . . will be to marry Margaret Truman . . ."

Only once has Bob put a point on his wisecracks and buried one in somebody's ribs—it happened at another big dinner in Washington a week ago: Among those present was Charles Luckman, former $300,000-a-year boss of Lever Brothers, who had long been Bob's sponsor. And in this column Luckman had made it clear that the sponsor was the boss! It was Luckman who canceled our trip to Tokyo last Christmas. Bob evened the score with this one—delivered with a grin:

"I hear Lever Brothers are behind a Broadway show now . . . called 'Where's Charley?'"

Unlike President Roosevelt, Mr. Luckman did not laugh—at dinner's end, Bob told everybody, "I was only kidding." We doubt it—Bob's wit is quick but never careless.

Many Parts

NOTHING about Bob's career is careless, and nobody in the history of show business has ever scored so high in so many fields—Jack Benny dies on screen, but Bob was top box office in 1949—Bob is no Bing, but he put "Buttons and Bows" on the Hit Parade—for radio he may hire writers, but his books have sold two million copies.

That Candid Camera Man's Hard to Trap

By Sonia Stein

I'm not saying it can't be done. But I couldn't do it and nobody else has ever done it, either.

What? Why that A-1 dream hope of every normal television viewer—turning the tables on exasperating Allen Funt of "Candid Camera."

I got close. I got within spit-in-the-eye distance, stare-down-the-nose distance. Unfortunately it was Funt who gave me the treatment, in spite of the fact that my forces were marshalled—and had been for four days.

Working through a "contact" who was able to contact a contact man once removed, I tried to get tabs on where Funt was setting up his candid camera to record tidbits of life in the emotional raw for his Monday night television show (WOIC—CBS-TV, 9 p. m.).

We lined up Project X for time unknown, place unknown.

Just Not Shooting

MONDAY came and went. Funt was not shooting. Tuesday came and went. Funt was not shooting. Wednesday came and I would be oh, so happy to have breakfast with Judy Canova, and lunch with Jeff Clark and tea (!) with Henry Morgan if Project X didn't turn up. And it didn't. There went Wednesday.

Came Thursday, Funt would not be participating in the shooting, but his fumble-talk expert Dick Christman would be holding forth at the exchange desk in the nursery department at Gimbel's in New York.

Would Funt be around later? Maybe.

At 5:15 on the fourth day of the vigil, Funt went to work at the exchange desk—and this little fly walked up to trap the spider.

The Hat

WEARING my very best Empress Eugenie, sky blue, ombre shaded, imported curled ostrich feather Covell original (hat, that is) for moral support, and to cue the still cameraman who'd been sitting out the vigil with Funt's movie cameraman behind a screen all afternoon, I approached.

"I bought a pink baby blanket this morning for a friend who called from the hospital to say his wife had a little girl. When I checked with him later today, I found out she'd also had a little boy, and now I'd like to exchange this for a pink and blue blanket for both the babies," I said.

Mildly dumbfounded, and en garde against this neurotic customer, Funt fingered his carnation, made a few conciliatory noises, wrote himself a note which I could not see, and absented himself to look for a pink and blue baby blanket.

The absence was dear to both our hearts. To him because it was primarily designed to give his movie cameraman time to reload a camera Funt happened to know was empty. To me because it gave me time to palm an earring which I had already laid on the counter on pretext that it was too tight and I wanted to rest my weary earlobe for a minute.

Impasse Ensues

BACK came Funt with blanket. Ensued then an impasse conversation between Funt and self in which I accuse him of stealing my earring, in which he offers to be searched, in which I decline the honor and demand my property, in which he asks me just what I expect him to do, etc.

Shortly he calls in assistant Christman, who unfortunately knows from the cameramen who I am, but does not understand the virtue of the proceedings. In record time the jig is up; I am exposed as an imposter, a newshack posing as we, the people.

But Christman aside, it seems the jig was up before we started. Funt, an experienced old party in these matters, had spotted me for a "plant" the minute I walked up. The little note he'd written himself testified to his astuteness. It read: "This lady knows she is being photographed."

Extra Sense

IT'S an extra sense with Funt, evidently. "I can always spot a phony," says this man who deals constantly with people caught off guard in trying situations manufactured by Funt.

Several times he's been taken in, momentarily, but most people give themselves away. One magazine writer quibbled over a library fine so vehemently Funt spotted him. Another one bearded him in his office (where his hidden camera is most thoroughly hidden!) playing a magazine saleswoman, but broke into giggles.

The most successful stunt was pulled by a high school girl back in the "Candid Microphone" radio days. She tracked Funt down by telephone, said she represented his fan club and would he come address the club. Funt, preening himself like anybody else, suggested the club come to the office. "Ha, ha, there isn't any fan club," came the girl's voice. "I've got this conversation recorded. Would you like to hear it played back?"

Funt isn't positive what gave me away. In fact, for a long while he wasn't sure, because I had put my combination filing case-pocketbook right in front of the hidden microphone, a display of stupidity he did not expect in a "plant."

Most people who try to pose as unknowning, are sent there by the stores or business firms where Funt is working, in the hope they'll work in a plug for the place. This Funt finds a nuisance,

New Westmoreland Players Open Wilde Play Thursday

THE newly organized Westmoreland Players will produce their first play on Thursday in their brand new auditorium on Westmoreland Hill. A cast of nine, under the direction of Joan Connor, is producing Oscar Wilde's "Importance of Being Earnest."

Technical director Dorothy Guthrie has added a new note to the old stand-by with an ultra stylized set done in cerise, chartreuse and black. Probably it is one of the few times Wilde has been taken out of the conventional plush realistic living room and the change should be interesting.

Harold Master, publicity chairman and one of the original organizers, has some big plans for the group. If this production is a success he plans to take it around to other church and little theater playhouses.

Production dates are February 16, 17 and 18. Tickets may be obtained at the Social Hall box office, Westmoreland Church, or by calling Oliver 4787 or Oliver 3900.

THE ARTS CLUB will try to untangle four adventurers marooned on an Arctic wireless station this week, in a "non tropical farce."

The play, "Petticoat Fever," by Mark Reed, will be produced February 14, 16 and 17 at 2017 I st. nw., with Bitsy Birney directing, assisted by Ruth Bale.

Tickets may be purchased at the Arts Club box office, 2017 I st., or by calling Republic 0282.

THE MONTGOMERY Players will be the first little theater group in Washington to produce Samuel Spewack's "Two Blind Mice," which will play at Leland Junior High on February 17, 18, 21 and 22.

Tickets may be obtained at the Leland Junior High School, or by calling Wisconsin 4685.

Moliere Play Has Another Week at C. U.

CATHOLIC UNIVERSITY'S speech and drama department production of "The Would-Be Gentleman" will continue for one more week in the campus theater.

Directed by Father Gilbert V. Hartke, the blithe version of Moliere's comedy classic had the unique distinction last week of finding the Washington reviewing fraternity split down the middle. Two fouud it a pleasant revival of an interesting favorite; two were diametrically opposed.

Heading the cast is Robert Dietz, as a socially ambitious middle class merchant, with Jill Leahy as his perceptive wife.

Ernst Toller's dramatic comedy, "No More Peace" will be presented Tuesday night as the first offering of its year by the Howard Players of Howard University. The run will continue through Saturday evening in Spaulding Hall on the campus.

Dr. Anne Cooke, head of the speech and drama department, has directed a cast of 23 players, including Carol Foster, Edwin Ellick and John Bundy, who was with the Howard group on its European tour last fall.

"In Arcady," a two-act operetta, will be presented in the social hall of Woodside Methodist Church, 8814 Georgia ave., Silver Spring, Wednesday through Saturday nights.

'Tobacco Road'

Jack Kirkland's all-Negro production of his famed record-breaker, "Tobacco Road," has returned to the stage of the Howard Theater, where it was a hold-over attraction last month. The run is scheduled to end Thursday night.

TEXAN: Cathy Downs, heroine of "The Sundowners," the Texas Technicolor outdoor yarn bound for the Warner Thursday, with Robert Preston, Robert Sterling and John Barrymore, jr., in the cast

Jorge Bolet To Solo With Orchestra

AGAIN the National Symphony comes up with an important work new to its concerts.

With Jorge Bolet as soloist, the orchestra will play the third piano concerto in D Minor, by Rachmaninoff. Howard Mitchell returns another great contemporary piece to the local repertoire before intermission with the symphony arranged by Paul Hindemith from his mighty opera, Mathis der Maler.

BOLET

The symphony, in three movements, derives from the prelude to the first act, the instrumental passages before the second act, and the closing pages of the opera. The entire score is based on the life and works of Matthias Grunewald, a noted painter of the fifteenth century.

Two Famous Conductors Sign

LEOPOLD STOKOWSKI and Ernest Ansermet have been engaged as guest conductors of the National Symphony Orchestra for next season.

With such news as this, have you remembered to make your contribution to the current financial campaign? Send it to the National Symphony, Washington 6, D. C.

Mary Vagnani . . . plays title role of Dolly Varden in Columbia Opera Company's performances Friday and Saturday nights in Roosevelt Auditorium

ON RECORDS

WHEN Vaughn Monroe recorded "Riders in the Sky" last year, he really started something. In the first place, he introduced an unusual theme to popular music. "Riders" was based on an old Western legend that ghost riders in the sky symbolize death. And in its moralistic exhortation, "Cowboy, change your way of life," it was a far cry from the "moon, June" school of popular songwriting. Melodically, the song was couched in a tempo strange to dance music, being more closely similar to the vigorous time of the "Song of the Vagabonds." In the light of some of the efforts which have followed "Riders," Monroe's record may be said to have been something of a touchstone in modern music.

First off, there was "The Old Master Painter." Borrowing the religious overtones, plus the musical tempo and Western flavor of "Riders," the song speaks allegorically of "the old master painter from the far-away hills," who painted the flowers, the daffodils, and who created his masterpiece when "he climbed down from heaven and he gave me you."

This bit of musical pantheism brought into prominence a new recording artist, Richard Hayes. A 19-year-old Arthur Godfrey Talent Scouts winner, Master Hayes turned the trick by an effective employment of Vaughn Monroe's hard-hitting vocal style of the earlier record.

Then along came "Mule Train." Neither a legend nor an allegory, the song borrowed only the tempo, the Western flavor and the dramatic approach of "Riders in the Sky." "Mule Train" proved quite a success for Frankie Laine, who had his try at a religious theme with "That Lucky Old Sun" ("Dear Lord above, can't you know I'm pining?"); and it also gave Bing Crosby a chance to get into the act.

FIGURING that the Western idea has been done to death, the songwriters are now turning to legends from other sources. "The Flying Dutchman," the story of a phantom ship doomed to sail on an endless trip with the devil at the wheel, which served Richard Wagner for one of his operas, is now a popular song. Richard Hayes, in his latest release, sings it at a desperately fast clip, in "Riders" tradition. As with many of this record's predecessors, the dramatic effect of the narrative is enhanced through the use of a chorus. Incidentally, this same legend was the basis of "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner."

Frankie Laine, whose vocal style these days is clearly intended to emphasize the shock value of these tales of destiny and death, is now represented by the "Cry of the Wild Goose." This is a powerful folk legend of a man who possesses the security of a home and a woman's love, but who is the victim of an irresistible wanderlust when the spring arrives and he hears the crying of the wild geese moving north.

Destiny, death, shock value, allegory, legend; these are strange words indeed to be used in the discussion of popular songs. Vaughn Monroe really started something with "Riders in the Sky"; and the last roundup is nowhere in sight.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:30 a. m.; Moondial, 11:20 p.m. to 12:30 a.m.

The Music Box

Native Music Dominates Week's List

LINCOLN'S Birthday appropriately brings out a good solid dose of native music.

Note the programs at Barker Hall, All Souls' Unitarian Church, and the National Gallery today. The week also brings back the Ballet Russe on Saturday, carrying over to next Sunday and Monday.

Christiansen

Clifford Curzon, last season's greatest new concert artist, plays again in Constitution Hall today. Another great figure returning is the Hindu dancer, Uday Shankar, coming tomorrow night. The busy week includes other new voices in Washington, with Frances Yeend singing for the Army Band, and Mary Vagnani as "Dolly Varden."

Paul Christiansen's Concordia Choir brings their second great program to Constitution Hall Tuesday night. What a choral repertoire they explore! Jorge Bolet, pianist, is substituting for Byron Janis this week with the National Symphony, playing the local symphony's premiere of the Rachmaninoff third concerto.

THE New York Wind Ensemble has an amazing list of music for the Library of Congress Friday. And Howard Mitchell leads the last of the season's six free concerts for the children of Washington schools.

The Hamilton National Bank High School Musical Talent Contest goes on the air Tuesday evening on WMAL at 8:30. The biweekly broadcasts of Washington high school students will continue every Tuesday at that hour and Sunday afternoons at 5 until the finals are reached in May.

Franck's Dull Organ Music Dully Done

FRANCK: Fantasy in C Major. LPS 137. $3.95. Marcel Dupre, organist.

We discussed the other side of this record last Sunday (Bach's G. Minor Fantasy and Fugue).

In that case, we reported dull playing of a great masterpiece. Today we can only make things less happy by observing that here is equally dull playing, and the music is dull. Franck was a master in some works and in some forms. But when he was not sure of himself, as in this work, his habit of wandering harmonically becomes most distressing. This is a poor record to interest people in organ music.

St. Olaf Choir Christiansen, director. Album D-2. Available by writing to the school, Northfield, Minn.

Here is perfect recording of one of the famous choirs of our country. The tone of this ensemble emerges from the vinyl-plastic surfaces as clear and cool as ever.

The music is shorter pieces by Bach, Palestrina, Tschesnokoff, Luvass, Christiansen and others. We have long felt the wooden tone of the sopranos and the dark shaded vowels beloved by Christiansen militated against the greatest beauty of sound. But for those who like this kind of singing, here is a fine permanent sample. Olaf's brother, Paul, appears with his Concordia Choir Tuesday night in Constitution Hall.

PROKOFIEFF: Peter and the Wolf. London Philharmonic Orchestra under Nicolai Malko, with Frank Phillips, narrator. LPS. $3.95.

Here is a fine long-playing version of the famous piece of Prokofieff, now almost a folk legend. Frank Phillips has a clear, British accent, but his diction is so simple that the words come to us with real warmth.

The sound of the orchestra is beautiful, but their playing, notably in the strings, has little of the precision for which this same combine was once famous.

Chopin: Melancholy; also: Dougherty: Love in the Dictionary. Blanche Thebom, mezzo-soprano. Victor 10-1485. $1.

Miss Thebom sings her own words in the Chopin music. It is an adaptation of the E Major Etude for piano and correspondingly inappropriate for vocal purposes.

The Dougherty song is cute at first hearing. By the third time through you have had it. The voice is well recorded but the piano sounds wooden.

OPERATIC RECITAL by Eugene Conley, tenor, with New Symphony Orchestra. LIP 26. $5.95.

Conley sings: Flower Song (Carmen), Cavatina (Faust), Non piangere, Liu (Turandot), M'appari (Martha), Che gelida manina (Boheme), Questo e quella (Rigoletto), both arias from Tosca, and one from La Favorita.

Conley's voice is smooth, handsome, and well managed. It is also unsubtle, and lacking in color. His singing is well managed from medium soft to full voice. He cannot sing softly, but the lack is less noticeable than with less skillful tenors. The physical side of the recording is excellent. But did we really need new versions of most of these scenes?

Scotch Work Fresh, Rewarding

James Cowie's "The Classroom," now on display at the Corcoran Gallery's exhibition of Scottish paintings

By Jane Watson Crame

CONTRARY to advance information, the exhibition of Scottish painters at the Corcoran turned out to be more contemporary than nineteenth century, although several works of the latter period are included. The St. Andrews Society of Washington assisted in opening festivities for the show, which marks the first time the Highlanders have been featured in a display of their own in the Capital.

The exhibit was organized by the British Council, in cooperation with the Toledo Museum of Art in this country and the National Gallery of Art in Canada. The aim was to show what was going on in contemporary painting as seen in relation to the work of the artists' immediate predecessors. Like the English, who since the war have contributed some of the finest contemporary painting and sculpture in the world, the Scottish present-day artists are breaking new ground. If there is no daringly original painting, there is much that is fresh, sensitive and rewarding to the eye.

Transition Told

ON THE whole the paintings are more objective than introspective. The show is particularly interesting because it reveals the transition from the academic, story-telling painting which prevailed at the turn of the century, through impressionism to the present. Traces of earlier influences have by no means been shaken off completely, but as Stanley Cursiter in the foreword remarks, "the sturdy independence of the Scot has asserted itself in the most diverse and individualistic ways, so that it is difficult to find a common denominator for the painters in contemporary Scottish art."

In this respect, the artists are much like our o . , a parallel that extends to the insistence on perfection of technique at the turn of the century, but not to the preoccupation with abstraction and expressionism which prevails in the United States today.

To carry the game of parallels a little further, one finds in the show a painter with kinship to our Andrew Wyeth (James Cowie, "The Classroom"), to the late Edward Bruce (William Crozier, "Edinburgh"), to the late Allen Tucker (William MacTaggart, "Loch-an-Klan") and so on. There is a portrait in the manner of Sargent and a lively, flat-surfaced rendering of an orchestral concert by William Crosbie, one of the younger artists, which is charming. We enjoyed the "Still Life" and the "Flowers in a Square" by John Maxwell, which seemed to us the most imaginative works in the group, and in realistic vein, "Tenement Family" by R. Henderson Blyth.

ALSO seen at the Corcoran are prints in color and black and white by the Scandinavian artist, Adja Yunkers, who came to the United States in 1947. Woodcuts are the artist's preference, and he has achieved some powerful results with the medium. Like the work of his colleague, Louis Schanker, at the Phillips Gallery, the visual effects achieved defy description. Of the two, Junkers seems to be the more effective. Both have been conducting experiments to enlarge the possibilities of the woodcut. Both rely heavily on texture and color. The closer the plastic arts come to attaining a distinct language of their own, the more they make description or reproduction impossible. The response to these prints is a personal matter; personally, we got a great deal out of the Junkers display, less from the Schanker.

Also shown at the Phillips is a small group of paintings by Laughlin Phillips, whose abstractions now emerge with stronger color and greater sureness to make a well-integrated and attractive display. The paintings by Theodore Stamos were just coming down, and we confess to disappointment in those we saw. For the most part, they were large canvases with tenuous forms floating in large background areas as if uncertain where to land. Stamos, we understand, is a great admirer of Arthur Dove, but as yet his work reveals no such inner conviction as the older man had.

Lady Sets Snare for Candid Cameraman, but Trap Fizzles

although it was through such a maneuver that he got hold of Christman.

Not only is Christman accomplished at stringing amorphous words together and winding them up with a recognizable piece of sentence, he also helps Funt in three cornered gags such as the one on last week's show when he played Mr. Gimbel and told a woman customer he was planning to fire Funt because he was so difficult. The harassed woman begged him not to do it on her account, said she thought he tried hard.

This nice side to people's natures is the thing Funt most enjoys showing. He is as happy—perhaps happier—to show the patience on the part of humankind in the face of an intolerable situation, as he is to show somebody whose temper can't survive Funt's obtuseness.

Funt Burns

IN A RECENT critical magazine piece, a writer pounded Funt for his "sadistic, poisonous, antihuman and sneaky" show, but pointed out in the same article that "in reality, he is demonstrating . . . that people are fundamentally decent and trusting . . ."

"Of course," says Funt. "That comment refutes the whole criticism."

Funt was exasperated considerably farther than he ever exasperated any of his subjects by this article. He counted 10, in fact he counted for three weeks and then invited the author to appear on the show to debate the subject with one of radio's most famous writers who happens to be an avid "Candid Camera" technique admirer. The magazine writer declined to pursue the matter further, remarking with unintentional humor, "When I have finished with a program, it is finished."

Funt got a kind of kick out the fact that the magazine piece cited Robert Flaherty's "Louisiana Story" as the proper kind of thing to do with the documentary technique as opposed to Funt's improper use. "Flaherty has copies of a number of 'Candid Camera' shows," Funt explains. Like Helen Hayes who has albums of the radio candid show, and several playwrights, Flaherty studies the techniques of candid conversation from the shows.

Funt is convinced more realistic dialogue could be written if playwrights would listen to a few shows and come to realize that people rarely wait for each other to finish a sentence.

The implication in the magazine story that Funt is a mean character ruffles him. "Anybody who sees me in the sequences we do with kids can't believe I'm a mean guy," he claims. (Funt is actually very effective with children, dealing with them as man to man.)

He Pats 'Em

IT IS on this personality point that observations of Funt seem to go divergently. Funt, who keeps the subject's gaze locked in his (so their eyes won't wander to the partly concealed camera) and pats middle-aged women on the arm, feels he is exerting a certain earthy charm. And in his way he is. But to the very genteel in the audience, he is probably loathesome.

This slight lack of sensitivity keeps Funt from appreciating why some of the sequences he uses are "in poor taste" for some people, since he is careful not to make minority groups targets, careful not to use sequences (which once looked like a good idea) of men turning to stare at a girl fixing her stocking.

Funt's subjects, caught testing mattresses, eating, taking money left in a phone booth, trying on hats, seldom refuse to let "Candid Camera" use them. Funt gives them a fast, positive approach and they are usually too startled to realize they could say no. Funt won't push anybody who is doubtful: "even six or eight enemies could make a lot of trouble," he says.

Subjects are paid $50 for their mental anguish if the sequence is used, but few do it for the money. In four years Funt's books have become $15,000 out of whack from the checks people have framed for souvenirs instead of cashing.

Funt keeps adding new ideas to the show, is currently working on matching movie situations with real ones. For example, when the movie hero jumps in a cab and says ,"Follow that car!" the driver does it. What happens in real life?

When the movie hero throws a big bill on the florist's counter and grabs a handful of flowers, he runs out amid the florists ringing thanks. What happens in a real florist shop?

One thing Funt deserves a real gold medal for, is the candid commercial. He simply asks people to test the mildness of Sponsor Phillip Morris' product with whatever other cigarette they choose. Phillip Morris wins the battle every time—at least in every sequence that's used, to be sure—and it makes a very effective commercial.

The Washington Philatelist

Briton Calls Stamp Designs Of U. S. Uniformly Bad

By William M. Stuart

FROM the standpoint of design United States stamps produced in 1949 are uniformly bad, according to the opinion of a British philatelic writer. Criticism is essential in discussing stamp design of any Nation. The foreign writer does not spare United States stamps and of the many issues, considers the Annapolis commemorative the only good specimen of the year, although he says even this is somewhat "wrecked" by its pale greenish-blue color.

STUART

Referring to the worst designs of the year, he continues that the 15-cent United States Universal Postal Union issue and Denmark's Universal Postal Union bear equal rank. The 6-cent Alexandria commemorative is termed especially bad, and several United States stamps are termed stolid and dull. Hardly a nation escapes the criticism of this writer and the general indictment of poor quality of practically all Universal Postal Union commemorative issues will have a tendency to make friends rather than create enemies.

It is doubtful whether the average stamp collector is greatly concerned with designs; he collects them all and designs make little or no difference to him. A stamp may be beautiful, or it may be poor—in either case it is collectible.

AT THE Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., on Tuesday evening an auction sale was held, Ellery Denison acting as auctioneer. Manager Anderson of the auction committee has issued a call for more material. He says that it is necessary that future sales be confined to higher grade stamps. There will be another meeting of the club Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, 1012 9th st. nw.

The Capital City Post Card Club will meet tomorrow evening at the home of Mrs. Helen Gollers, 1218 Floral st. nw.

Montreal Cruise Ships To Make Halifax Call

The five-day cruises in both directions between Boston and Montreal by the Canadian National Steamships' liners Lady Nelson and Lady Rodney will be resumed this year with the opening of navigation on the St. Lawrence River.

An added feature of the 1950 Boston-Montreal five-day cruises which will cover a distance of 1230 miles along the scenic New England and Nova Scotia coast and through the majestic St. Lawrence River and Gulf, will be calls at the port of Halifax, Nova Scotia, in both directions.

The St. Lawrence River route is usually open for navigation in April. It is expected the Lady Rodney will inaugurate the 5-day cruises with her sailing from Boston about April 29 and from Montreal about May 12.

Whistle Stopping

Party, Party—It's Just One Mad Whirl

By Orval Hopkins

I HAD just convinced myself that there couldn't possibly be anybody named Diggory Venn, when behold what comes in the mail but a note from Mrs. Diggory Venn, who is very close to the Castle Harbour, a hotel in Bermuda. "We are going to have a small celebration in our suite at the Mayflower," she wrote, "when I hope I may have the pleasure of meeting you." Little does she know . . . Anyway, I was unable to go, but it was nice to be thought of.

A party I did go to, however, was one to which I was not invited. The Association of American Railroads threw a big racket at the Carlton the other night, but didn't invite me—and after all the complimentary things I've said about the railroads. However, I went over there and barged up to the door as if I owned the joint. A man stopped me and wanted to know my name. I told him and he turned around to announce me.

"Mr. Hoskins!" he shouted and I passed in to meet Gordon MacRae, who works for the railroad people on a radio show. I told him I had reviewed a movie of his once. "Not bad," I said. MacRae passed me on to his wife, saying, "Here's a man who thought my first picture was pretty good." I thought I detected a sneer in his voice. Gee whiz, I was just trying to be nice.

Later I accosted a railroad man and demanded to know why the hell I hadn't been invited. He assuaged me easily. Then another man yelled for silence and said, "Gordon MacRae has consented to sing a couple songs." MacRae sang "Blue Skies," "Some Enchanted Evening," and "Ol' Man River." I was forced to skip the later. It was a nice party, even for the gate-crashers.

When I got home I yodeled a couple of bars of "Blue Skies" for my wife in my rusty baritone. "Think I sound like Gordon MacRae?" I asked. "Who?" she said. "Oh, you mean the Secretary of the Army? He's going to be president of the University of North Carolina, you know. I don't believe he sings at all."

Well, so it goes.

FINLAND, according to a letter I have here, wants you to come on over. I bow to nobody in ignorance of Finland, but I have a great affection for the Finnish people because up at the University of Oregon (this was many seasons ago, kids) you couldn't swing your feet without running into somebody named Matti or Viljo. In this letter, a man named H. Ramo, managing director of the Finnish National Travel office in New York, writes of his country: ". . . clean, attractive cities, 60,000 lakes, dense coastal archipelagoes, arts and music, literate, progressive and industrious people. Only a visa is needed for entry into Finland, and once there, the tourist may wander where and how he will, photograph and film to his heart's content. He will find modern hotels and restaurants, at moderate prices. He can travel comfortably by train, plane, bus or lake steamer. Drive-yourself cars, gas and tires are freely available."

Ever think of Finland?

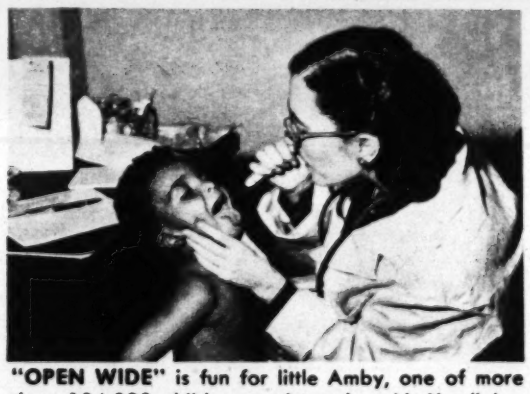
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

SMALL BOY, casual at first, fidgets as he tries to screw up courage for ordeal (see photo at right) . . .

BOTTLE SOOTHES baby Kathleen, sister Lorraine yowls. Station holds clinic three mornings a week.



"OPEN WIDE" is fun for little Amby, one of more than 104,000 children registered at N. Y. clinics.

'This won't hurt!"

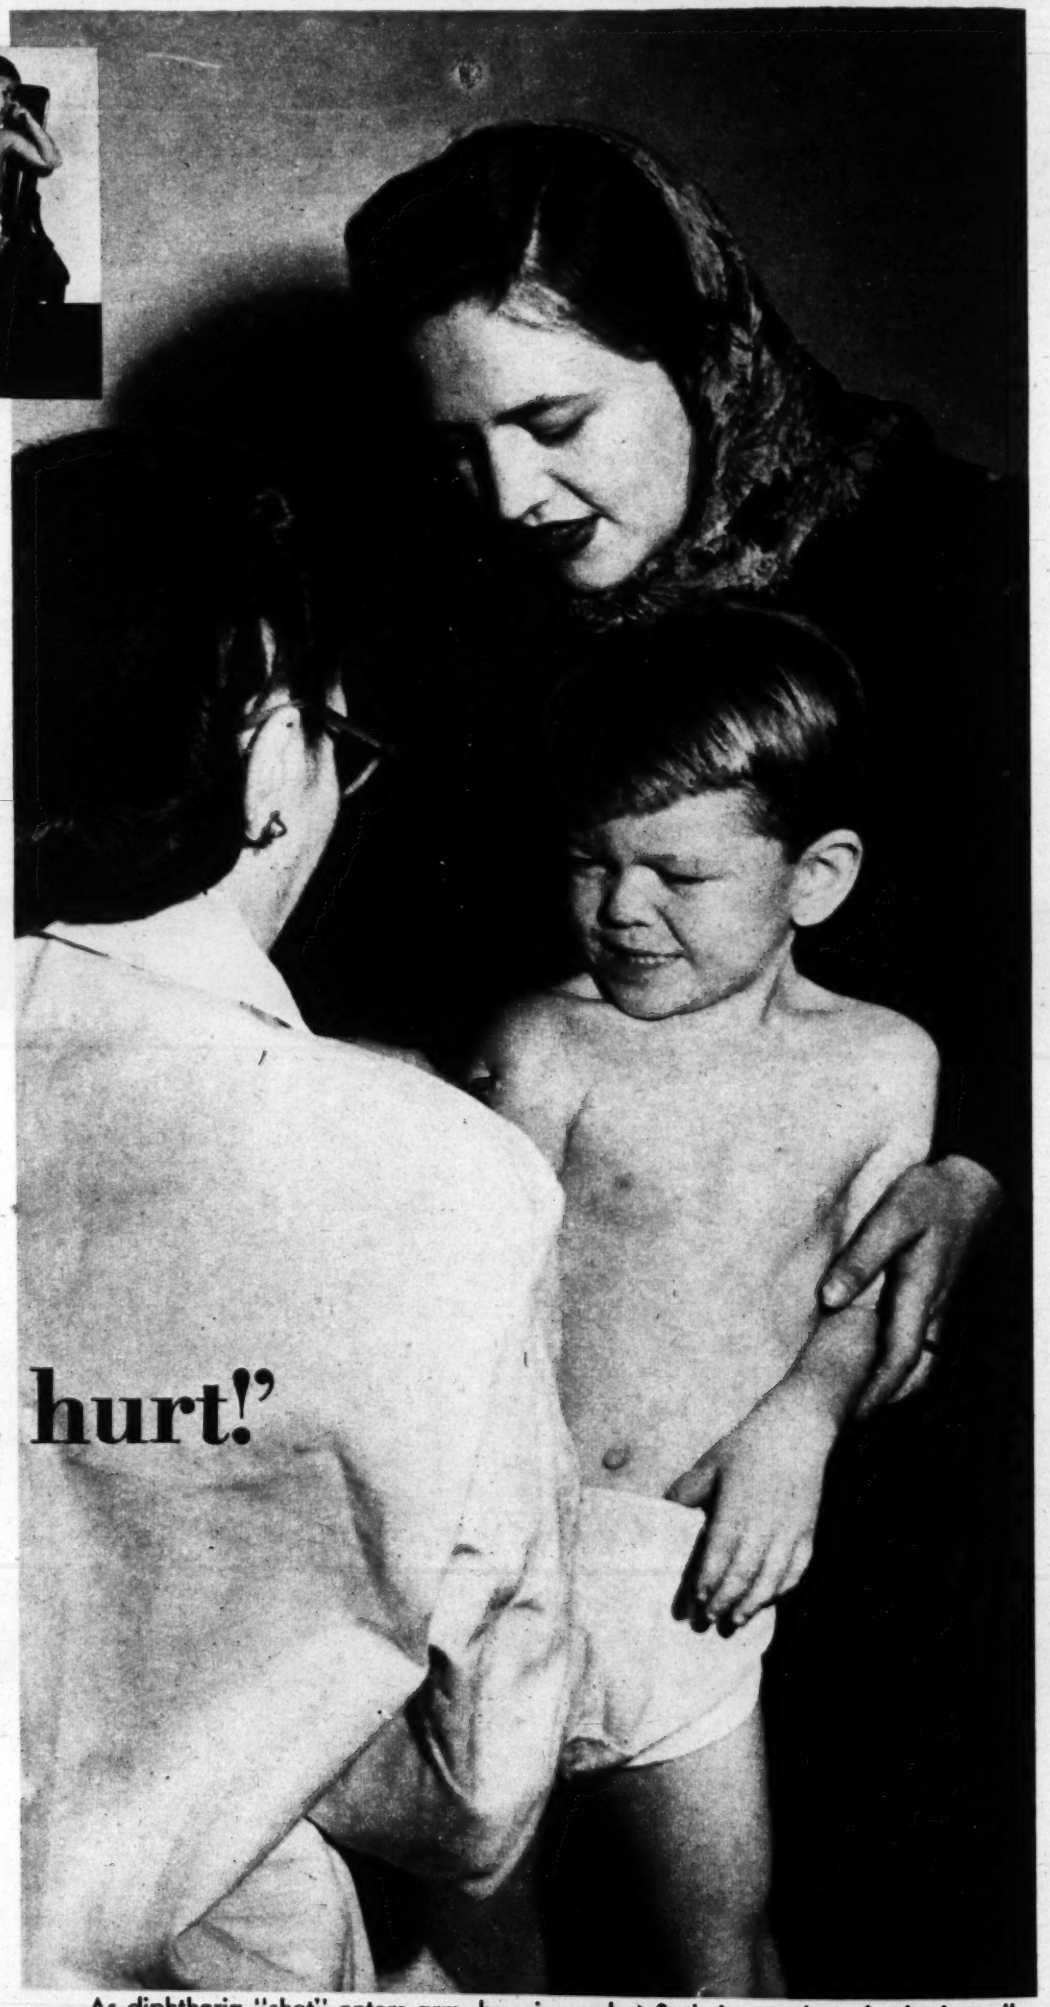
That's what the doctors say

—but 14 million kids can't be wrong

FOR 14 MILLION CHILDREN under the age of six, going to the doctor is life's first major ordeal. Many meet their first "docs" in the "child health stations" now spreading throughout the U.S.

A typical station (see photos) provides free medical service for infants and children up to the age of six. Services include: a) inoculation against smallpox, diphtheria and whooping cough; b) pediatric consultation with parents on child care, diet and behavior. If diagnosis is necessary, the child's parents are referred to a hospital or their own doctor.

Child health stations, usually city-supported, now operate in many communities. They immunize about 5,000,000 children a year.



. . . As diphtheria "shot" enters arm, he winces, but finds it wasn't so bad after all.

LIONEL BARRYMORE: a recipe for your life

Now You're Talking!

(EDITOR'S NOTE: One of the best programs on the air at present is a quiet fireside chat broadcast by Lionel Barrymore three times a week. There is none of the familiar radio hocus-pocus or flourish to the Barrymore show. Instead he gives such quiet bits of fireside philosophy as this passage from one of his recent broadcasts):*

"WHAT THINGS BOTHER YOU MOST—the little things or the big things? Hm? Why it's the little things . . . of course.

"Now you take a case of stomach-ulcers. Oh, I don't mean that's a little thing. You just ask the man who owns one. No, sir, stomach ulcers—they always feel big—but I don't know of a single case of stomach ulcers that wasn't caused by little things—little annoyances. And I've yet to hear of a man who had them, who got them from big annoyances.

"A famous English poet named William Cowper found an idea about this. I want to tell you what he wrote:

'He that holds fast the golden mean,
And lives contentedly between the little and the great
Feels not the wants that pinch the poor
Nor plagues that haunt the rich man's door . . .'

"Now there are some lines that really say something. And if you'll bear with me, I'll give you another good recipe for living. It's this:

" 'There are some cooks in the kitchen of life who say that to tell a fortune, one must take a deck of cards and shuffle well.

" 'But the best cooks will tell you to take 30 or 40 well-selected years, and mix them well with a liberal portion of good sense. For the best fortune-teller ever discovered is a mixture of two ingredients: experience and wisdom.' "

* "At Home with Lionel Barrymore." Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday evenings on a network of 150 independent stations.

THE CABIN to which Charlie Johns brought Eunice 13 years ago looked like this. Family still lives in the two-room frame dwelling on banks of War Creek.

Child Bride

In the winter of 1937, a shocked America read of the marriage of 9-year-old "Little Eunice" Winstead, of Sneedville, Tenn., to 22-year-old hillbilly coon-hunter Charlie Johns. An aroused public sent dolls as wedding presents; later the state upped its minimum marriage age to 18. To find out how "Little Eunice" is today, PARADE sent Tennessee writer Nora Greene Perrow to visit the Johns cabin in the hills.—ED.

REPORTER PERROW

By Nora Greene Perrow

I HAVE JUST BEEN to the Tennessee mountain cabin of "Little Eunice," child bride who made news headlines on a snowy winter Sunday in far-away 1937. She is now 22, the age Charlie was when he married her, and she is the mother of four children, one almost as old as she was when Charlie started "courtin' " her.

She is still married to Charlie, a shy mountain man in his mid-30s. He is still living from coon-huntin', berryin', fishin', and raisin' "aigs" —to trade for flour at the country store.

The rough cabin in the cornpatch is still slumbering under the ridge of oaks and sycamores.

The only reminder of the furor of 13 years ago is the collection of dusty dolls hanging from strings on the wood-smoked cabin walls.

Even nearby Sneedville has mostly forgotten.

As my car jounced up the mountain road 60 miles from Knoxville, I remembered the same road in 1937. It was busy with reporters and photographers. I remembered a pert, pig-tailed child, posing with her wedding presents, obligingly pretending to set the table, make the bed, and fetch Charlie's slippers for the cameramen. There was a report that neighbors were planning a "house raising" for the famous couple.

I was in for a surprise. I left my car and took the path down the steep clay bank, crossed the creek on moss-covered stepping stones, and walked half a mile through muddy cornfields. Finally, I saw smoke rising from a rickety chimney. Charlie's 1919 car lay rusting in a shed, its wheels sunk in the dirt. A row of patchwork quilts was blowing on the line. The grey-bearded man in overalls I knew must be Charlie's father, Nick Johns, now in his eighties.

A Handsome, Capable Mountain Mother

But the woman who met me was a happy, strapping mountain woman, with the blonde hair and brown eyes of the English-Scotch-Irish hill people who had rooted cabins into the Clinch Mountains as early as 1795. Her curly hair gathered severely back, and rimless glasses, made her look almost stern. She was "Little Eunice"! A small child was in her arms. The battered door swung wide in welcome.

"Charlie and the others is out walkin' in the fields," she explained with a friendly smile. "This here is Little Harold." The cabin was divided into two rooms–the "Big House" where they all sleep, and the smoky "cook room," with its enormous, square wood stove, iron skillets, and dough board. "Little Eunice" had moved into it the day she was married.

Since two years ago, when Charlie's mother, Mary Jane, died, she has done all the cooking, housework, and washing for her brood and Old Nick, besides helping Charlie in the fields. "I always try to do things the way Mary Jane learned me," she says. In addition, she Eunice Winstead married when she was 9 years old.

Today she's happy, and this exclusive report tells why...

mothers Charlie's sister's child, 9-year-old Little Thelma. ("We don't know no difference but what she's ourn.")

How had she married Charlie? Her brown eyes lighted with animation. She had sat near him in the one-room schoolhouse. "He was the biggest boy in school and older than the teacher, but no student to speak of," she chuckled. The teacher liked Charlie and let him sit by the window so his pet crow could fly in and light on his shoulder. "He mimicked and played and kept the children laughing all during books, but teacher said 'He is too big to WHUP!' "

"Charlie allus played like a child even atter he was a grown man," chimed in Old Nick. "School was just somewhere to go. I 'lowed he'd never learn nothing nohow, but hit was my duty to send him."

Charlie carried her books and ate cold sweet potatoes out of her dinner bucket and courted her for [illegible]e months before he could get her to say "Yes." A preacher married [illegible] standing out on the Big Road. "The bride did look a little young," he confessed.

And Then I Met Charlie

A lot of mountain people got married young. Eunice's mother married at 16, and Eunice's sister at 13. Eunice never got to see many city people, and was surprised at all the fuss. Except to go over the mountain to Morristown to get her glasses fitted, she had never left the place. Even now, she doesn't get as far as the store.

"Charlie takes the aigs to the store wonst a week," she says.

Her only contact with the outside world is the small battery radio on the mantel, but she's afraid of wasting the battery. "I only turn it on when there is church music or Roy Acuff."

"Little Eunice" has become a model mother. No girl in the Clinch Mountains would be considered "smart" unless she owns many quilts. Eunice has made 13 in the 13 years she has been married.

She sets up Mary Jane's quilting racks and uses miles of stitches and hundreds of yards of "Boss" thread following the floral designs. "Star pattern is easiest," she says, but her favorite is the hard-to-make "churn dasher" pattern.

The children are her favorite entertainment. "They climb all over Charlie and pull his hair," making her laugh. The first child, Evelyn, was born when Eunice was 14. "The others have come along about every two years," as she remembers. "The baby one, Little Harold, was born last October. I haven't kept no account of birthdays."

"You sit right down and eat," she invited warmly. When she had made the family biscuit and cornbread, she "wasn't looking for no company," but she hurriedly opened a can of her own make of sausage, serving them in an old ironstone platter, floating in white flour gravy.

She talked copiously as her large, capable hands opened a can of peaches. She showed me how pretty they looked in the glass jar. Peaches grown right on the place, too, she said. "Hit helps a lot to can. A body wouldn't have nothing to eat when company comes, if they didn't can."

With pride, she showed me how to make a "family pie." She opened another shiny clean glass jar of juicy apples, cooked them in a large black skillet, stirring and thickening with lumps of sugar from the jar on the walnut corner cupboard.

In another large black skillet, she spread some of the dough left over from her biscuits, "leaving the edge hang out all around." After she poured the apples in, she turned up the edges of the dough all round and shoved the skillet into the hot oven, feeding the stove with sweet smelling hickory wood.

"Hit must be agoin' to rain sure," she said, "the flies is so bad."

Out in the yard we noticed the bees seemed to sense the coming storm as they flew frantically from hive to hive. Old Nick and I helped Eunice take in the quilts before the rain came. About three o'clock in the afternoon, thunder rumbled through the little valley, followed by zig zag streaks of lightning. Old Nick sat on the porch where the rain could spatter him, and caught some of the fresh rainwater to drink. "Hit was needed powerful bad," he said.

"Listen," said Eunice suddenly turning her ear to the door, "I hear 'em comin'!" We all ran to watch Charlie and the children come down the hill to the house, the girls running ahead with their long, straight hair sticking to their faces, drenched to the skin.

Charlie's toothsome grin greeted us as he proudly told of their adventures. Eunice set food, milk and coffee on the table.

A large tomcat jumped on the table to snatch some sausage, but Eunice slapped it and it dashed out the kitchen window. Charlie talked while he ate, gulping his food like a bird dog.

Between lunges, he told of his many pets. His crow? Oh, yes, but that was a long time ago. "What I want to tell about," he said animatedly, "is my dog named 'You Know' . . . Why I learned 'You Know' to set right up in his chair and tip his hat to the ladies!" He also has a pet rooster named "Rubber Neck," that follows him around. "He crows louder'n a train whistle," laughed Charlie. "You can't hear yourself think! We ought to eat old 'Rubber Neck,' but he's so ugly I like to look at him!"

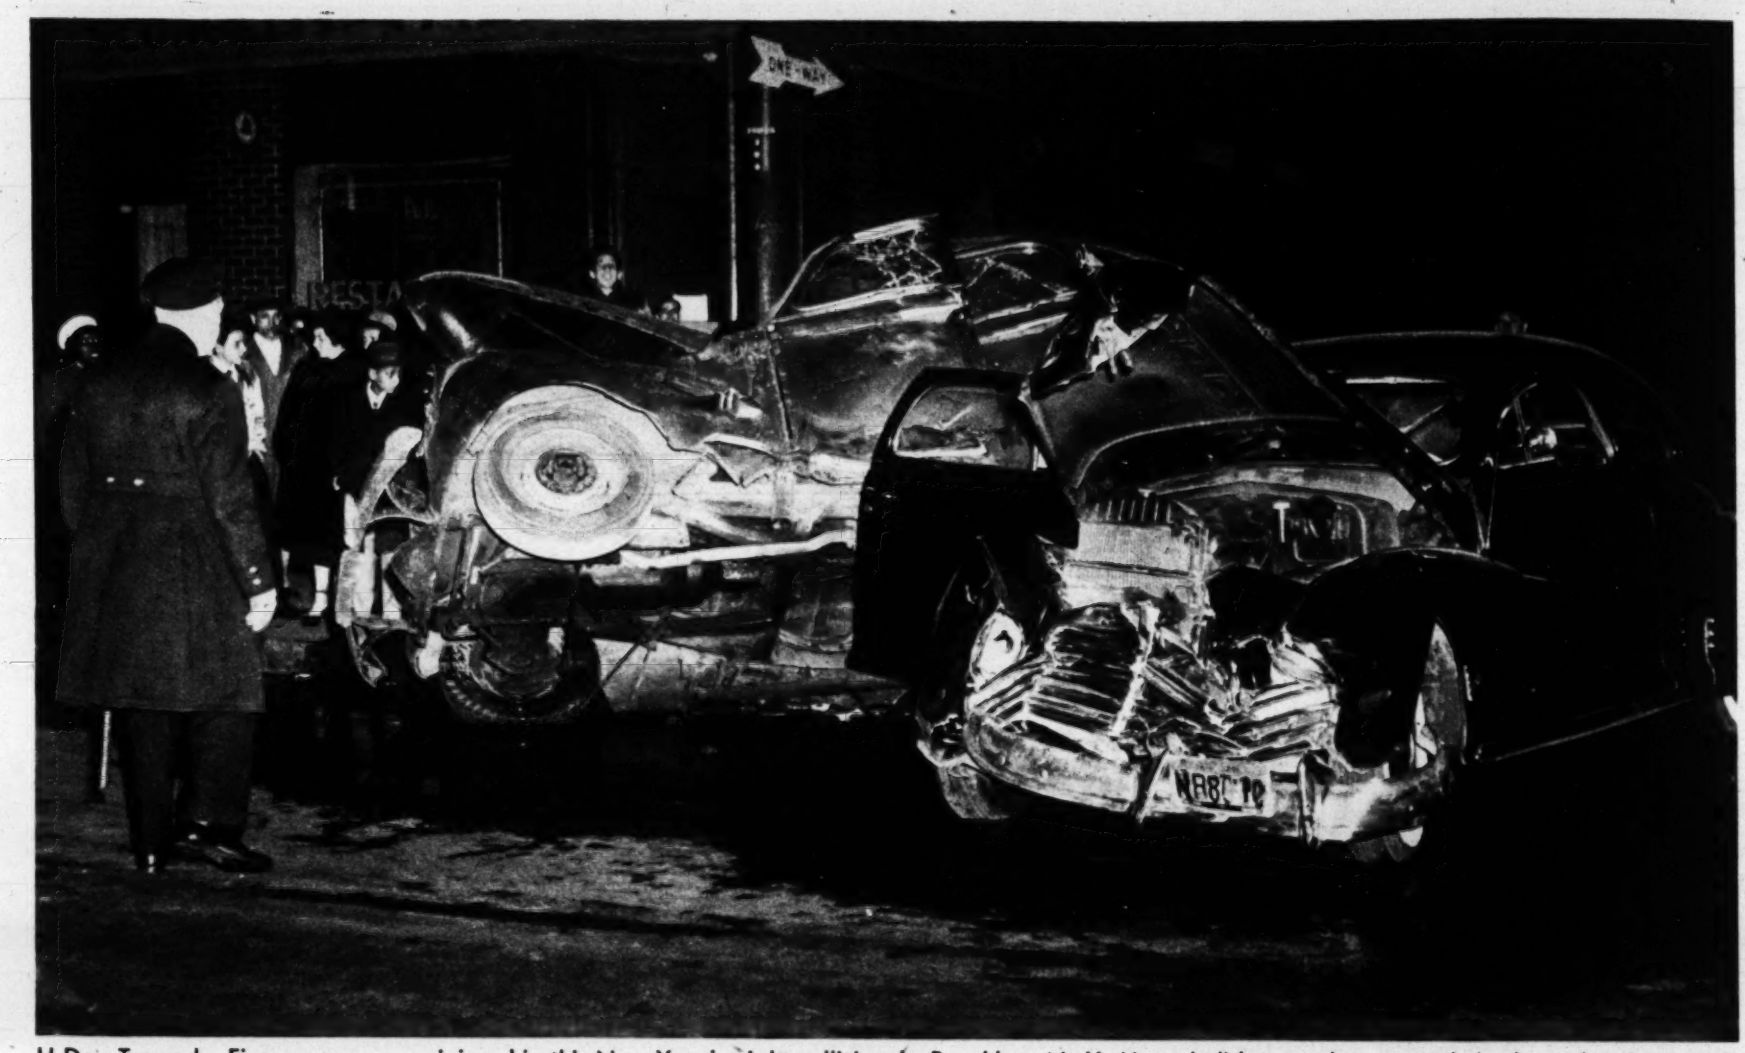
She Hopes for a Washing Machine—Some Day

Eunice talked about wanting a sewing machine, "and atter that maybe a wash machine," but Charlie's corn and tobacco is all he raises for market. "The rows of corn 're too long, and the ground's pore," he declares. His old mule that he plows with "hain't got no sense. Hit tramps on the corn a sight!"

While Charlie ate, Eunice combed the children's hair and put fresh aprons on the girls. Charlie didn't want his picture taken "Because I look too dirty," but he'd like a picture of Little Lee. They looked around for Little Lee, calling him and looking under the house. They finally found him squeezed away under the logs, but he refused to come out. Charlie started to cut a switch, saying "I'll whup you, Little Lee, if you don't come out!" "Don't whup him," said Eunice.

As I left, Eunice, Charlie, Old Nick, and the other children gaily waved goodbye. Little Lee climbed out from under the house and threw a rock at me. On the road again, I remembered what the neighbors say: "Eunice and Charlie? Him and her's HAPPY AS LARKS!"

AS NEWLYWEDS in 1937, Charlie and Eunice got letters, dolls, from all parts of the country. With them is lawyer Taylor Drinnon of Morristown, Tenn.



H-Day Tragedy: Five persons were injured in this New Year's night collision in Brooklyn, N. Y. Have holiday crashes passed the bounds of reason?

Let's Stop "H-Day" Murder!

Holiday slaughter on our highways becomes a grave national scandal

By EDWARD J. NICKEL

ARE YOU ONE of a growing number of American motorists who lock their family autos safely in the garage when holidays roll around?

Maybe you're like the Philadelphia motorist who was waiting for a bus on New Year's Eve.

"Yeh. I got a car," he explained, "home. But I'm not driving tonight. It's not safe."

Or maybe you're like the Chicago couple with four children, bound for a family reunion in Milwaukee. They preferred a train to their car the day before Christmas.

"It's too dangerous," the father said.

It's not safe. It's too dangerous. These were ordinary Americans, good drivers.

Yet they were afraid to drive on a holiday.

Fear Haunts the Highways

The reason? It's no mystery at all to law enforcement officials. It shouldn't be a mystery to anyone who reads his newspaper.

These motorists were taking no chances of being spattered by the bloody wave of death and injury which drenches U.S. highways every time America celebrates a nation-wide holiday.

Last December, officials of the National Safety Council soberly prophesied that 435 Americans would lose their lives in traffic accidents over the three-day Christmas weekend.

U.S. drivers almost lived up to the estimate. The Christmas Eve driving record was so incredible that it amazed even the nation's police. When the victims were counted, death turned out to be the Yuletide's gift to 413 motorists.

The New Year's record wasn't quite so grim. It never is. Safety experts say many motorists who squeak through the merry watch-night safely are so thoroughly weary by daybreak that they stick close to bed and hearth. The result is fewer cars on the road.

In Chicago, the National Safety Council had predicted for the nation 330 New Year's highway fatalities. Actually, 269 motorists died. Bad weather saved lives. Snow in the West and fog in the Mid-West kept motorists home.

But even with this assist from Nature, 682 Americans died over the year-end holiday. Is it any wonder that some motorists fear to drive?

"H-Day" Means Danger

Last year, just under 32,000 persons were killed as a result of U.S. traffic accidents.

More than 1,500 of these died on 14 "H" days—holidays and holiday weekends.

But this is only part of the story. Statisticians report that another 500, injured, died later.

Let's look at it another way.

YOUR CHANCES OF BEING KILLED IN AN AUTO ACCIDENT ARE ROUGHLY ONE AND ONE-HALF TIMES GREATER ON AN "H-DAY" THAN AT OTHER TIMES.

But these are statistics, and statistics are impersonal. Too often, the shocking extent of the holiday slaughter on our highways never strikes home until it strikes someone close to home:

Speeding and thoughtless driving take a deadly but regular H-Day toll a daughter, a husband, a close friend.

But ask the householders who live along Buena-Tuckahoe Road in Atlantic County, N. J. Shortly before midnight on New Year's Eve, their gaiety evaporated when they had to dash from their homes to fight a blaze in a car which had just crashed sickeningly into a concrete pole.

They found the driver, a 24-year-old man, crumpled dead over the back seat.

Or ask the ambulance driver from St. John's Hospital in Long Island City, N. Y. There were no Christmas carols ringing the air when he lifted a teen-aged schoolgirl to a stretcher two hours before dawn on December 26. Her companion had been killed instantly when their car skidded insanely and crashed into a pole. It was afternoon when she died.

Speed + Drinking

Multiply the tragedy six hundred and eighty times—for the other Americans who died in Ohio, Pennsylvania, Texas, Missouri, Florida—all of the 48 states. Gaiety one second; horror the next. What a grim way to celebrate!

What is responsible? Who is to blame? What can be done?

Granted that today's roads are crowded as never before—a situation aggravated on H-Days when everyone wants to visit Aunt Minnie—congestion alone is not responsible for most holiday accidents.

The biggest killer is speed made dangerous by lack of control, congestion and recklessness.

Scan the accident reports for any major holiday. "The victim apparently lost control of his car," is a phrase that keeps popping up.

And why did he lose control? "Because," says a police official, "he was probably driving too fast for road conditions." Narrow roads, crowded, curving parkways, badly planned intersections—these help fast drivers toward trouble.

Second only to speed—and sometimes responsible for it—say many public safety officers, is holiday party drinking.

209 Drunken Drivers

In Los Angeles police arrested 209 drunken drivers during the Friday evening which ushered in the Christmas weekend. In Detroit, 10 motorists were booked for drunken driving on New Year's Eve.

But stiff police action is useless if slack judges fail to penalize drunken drivers. In one large city a driver who drove a full city block on a crowded sidewalk boasted that he "got off with a $10 fine."

The threat of drinking drivers on H-Days is so serious that some cities have come up with novel plans for keeping tipsters from behind the wheel.

In South Bend and neighboring Mishawaka, Ind., police offered to send a free taxi for any motorist who had imbibed too heavily, and to tow his car to a public garage where he could retrieve it next day—free. Several motorists accepted.

In the opinion of experts at the Traffic Institute of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., a judicious use of plain common sense by American motorists would go a long way. They suggest: If you drink at holiday parties, don't attempt to drive home.

Don't plan a holiday drive to grandma's the "morning after the night before."

Get a good sleep before any trip.

Allow yourself plenty of time to get where you're going, and don't block the driver's view by overloading the inside of the car with luggage.

When you drive on a holiday, says Ned H. Dearborn, president of the National Safety Council, "drive on the theory that the other fellow may be woozy—and allow for it."

Check Your Car

Be sure your car is in good mechanical condition, and be a courteous driver. It's a holiday for the other driver, too, you know.

Don't mistake another driver's confusion for rudeness. Keep your temper. Driving on many of today's highways is hard work for him, too.

Unless more motorists stop throwing caution to the winds every time a holiday rolls around, more Americans are going to be spending their Memorial Days and Fourth of Julys—their Christmases and Labor Days—at home.

Because they'll be afraid to drive!

H-Days!

Let's turn the "H" from Horror to Happiness!

This year's "H-Days"—when traffic fatalities can be expected to spiral insanely—will be these: Easter Sunday, Memorial Day, July 4th, Labor Day, Christmas and New Year's weekends. Community action, started NOW, can help cut the toll. Here are suggestions for EVERY community, some made by the authoritative Traffic Institute of Northwestern University.

1. Work out special holiday traffic plans.
2. Solicit cooperation of tavern owners and bartenders to combat drunken driving. Plan a taxi service for car owners who are in no condition to drive.
3. Conduct pre-holiday education programs for drivers.
4. Plan for police traffic checks for drunken drivers, recklessness, and unsafe cars.
5. Route trucks over secondary roads.
6. Stiffen the legal penalties imposed for drunken driving.

Tiller Girls

IN THE U.S. a little girl who likes to dance often yearns to become a Rockette and perform, when she grows up, at New York's Radio City Music Hall. In England, a toe-tapping lass hopes she'll become a Tiller Girl and dance at London's Palladium.

The Tiller Girls, at present 200 strong, are high-kicking, precision dancers who have been entertaining British audiences since 1868. In that year theaterman John Tiller and his wife trained some neighborhood girls to lock arms and dance. Many of the routines they originated still are performed by chorus lines today.

Although the original Tillers are dead, the family tradition goes on. Tiller Girls, who come from all parts of England, must be 5 feet, 4½ inches tall and "refined" in type. Most of them begin at 15, retire in their 20's to become wives —and mothers of future Tiller Girls.

By DONALD WAYNE

TO THE PEOPLE of Salem, Ill., it seemed that Abraham Lincoln had a fight on his hands. Lincoln, later to become president, had just served as second in a grudge fight between two Salem men.

Lincoln's man had lost, and now the winner's second—a pugnacious, stubby little man—had his fists up. The crowd watched in disbelief. The little man foolishly wanted to fight Lincoln!

Lincoln looked the little fellow over and his face broke into a smile.

"I'll fight you, John," he grinned, "if you'll chalk your size on me, and every blow outside counts foul."

The townspeople roared and the fight fizzled.

Few men were ever able to chalk their size against Lincoln's humor. But Lincoln the funnyman is a Lincoln largely forgotten.

"He could make a cat laugh," one man recalled.

Laughter Saved Him

Laughter was a thing he brought to the Presidential chair, and in the darkest days of the Civil War it was the vent that saved him from cracking up. Once after reading Artemus Ward to his Cabinet—a habit that shocked more than it amused—Lincoln confessed that with "the fearful strain that is upon me night and day if I did not laugh I should die."

Lincoln used laughter as a sword and buckler. His laugh was shrill and high-pitched. He himself called it "coarse," but artist Francis B. Carpenter, who painted him at the White House, called it the "neigh of a wild horse on his native prairie . . . undisguised and hearty."

Whose Boots?

Lincoln threw open the White House to all visitors. He was so accustomed to hearing sob stories, advice on how to run the Government and pleas for favors that when a man told him he had just dropped in to look around, Lincoln invited him to lunch.

Lincoln was a gifted squelcher. When the aristocratic Secretary of the Treasury Salmon P. Chase called at the White House one day he found Lincoln polishing his big dusty shoes.

"Mr. President," said Chase, "gentlemen don't black their own boots."

Lincoln looked at him innocently. "Whose boots do they black?"

Lincoln's humor rarely ran to puns. But one day he was strolling with Secretary of State Seward along Pennsylvania Avenue. Seward pointed out a new sign with the name T. R. Strong. "Coffee," said Lincoln, "are stronger."

A lifelong friend of Lincoln's was Ward H. Lamon, who was also a backwoods lawyer. Travelling the Illinois circuit Lamon once got into a friendly wrestling match and argued his cases with a large rip in his pants. The other lawyers got up a mock subscription. The sheet was passed to Linc

During his term in Congress (where he was the acknowledged "champion story teller of the Capitol")a House member once harped on the "unconstitutionality" of a bill Lincoln liked. This man, who had bushy eyebrows and wore glasses, preened himself as a shrewd authority on what was constitutional and what was not. Lincoln arose and said the debate reminded him of a man he used to know in Indiana who had bushy eyebrows and wore glasses. One morning this old fellow spotted a squirrel high on a tree near his cabin. He got out his rifle and fired away. He fired shot after shot but couldn't hit the squirrel. He asked his son, "Don't you see that squirrel humped up about halfway up the tree?" "No, I don't," said the boy, who then stared hard into his father's face. "I see your squirrel, Pa!" he yelled. "You're shooting at a louse on your eyebrow."

CONTEMPORARIES captioned this old Lincoln cartoon: "This reminds me of a little joke."

Lincoln's stories were pointed anecdotes, often humorous, always illuminating. He told them to cheer a friend, to clinch an argument, to expose a fallacy, or as an antidote for his own melancholy. The gravest affair of state or diplomacy had its denominator in some character or incident he remembered in Kentucky, Indiana or Illinois. The effect usually clarified things at once.

Newspapers zealously printed "the latest" Lincoln quip. Stories circulated gratuitously in his name. Joke books flooded the paper-back market, stamping Lincoln with gags and yarns he never uttered. But Lincoln denied that he ever invented any. "I am only a retail dealer," he said.

He joked about his experiences in the Black Hawk War. As captain of his tiny raw militia Lincoln was drilling his men and marched them to a gate. He couldn't think of the command for getting them through. "This company," called Lincoln, "is dismissed for two minutes, when it will fall in again on the other side of the gate."

How to Save Jeff Davis

Toward the end of the war there was a lot of discussion about what to do with Jefferson Davis. Many rabid northerners wanted to hang him. Lincoln had a solution which reminded him of a man in Illinois who drank too much and had taken the pledge. He stuck to lemonade, but told his friends that if they poured in a little brandy "unbeknownst" to him, he didn't see how he could object. If Jeff Davis could get out of the country "unbeknownst" to him, Lincoln implied, the problem would solve itself.

Lincoln one day picked up a despatch reporting the capture of a brigadier general and twenty mules. "Too bad about the mules," he said. "I can make more brigadiers, but those mules cost $125 apiece."

When Lincoln was President-elect a wiseacre asked him how long his legs were. "Exactly the right length," said Lincoln, "to reach from my body to the ground."

Of a speaker who was a bag of wind Lincoln murmured, "Cut his galluses and let him go up."

General McClellan, whose activities proved to be more political than military, reminded Lincoln of a backwoods neighbor whose "horse kicked up and stuck its foot through the stirrup." The man said to the horse, "If you are going to get on, I will get off."

Humor flowed from Lincoln like light. It was his great democratic solvent.

A popular joke of the day told about two Quaker ladies carrying on a spirited conversation in a railway coach. Said one: "I think Jefferson Davis will succeed."

"Why does thee think so?"

"Because Jefferson is a praying man."

"So is Abraham a praying man."

"Yes," replied the first, "but the Lord will think Abraham is joking!"

"I haven't a friend in the world. Trouble is, nobody understands me."

"I can't get her out of my mind."

DURING THE 17 years that Ylla, famous Hungarian-born animal photographer, has been taking pictures, she has come to one conclusion: The most appealing dogs, she says, are sorrowful-looking dogs.

"A melancholy dog," she says, "probably isn't any sadder at heart than any other dog. Chances are, he's looking for handouts and knows he can get them by looking wistful."

On these pages are some of the moody dogs Ylla has photographed.

LAST OF THE JAZZMEN

When the oldtimers go,

Bob Wilbur will carry on

By FRANK DeBLOIS

IN THE OLD DAYS, a midnight visitor to Manhattan's famed 52nd Street could always count on hearing a torrent of hot music pouring from every other doorway. But today a lonely clarinet moaning softly in the night is almost the only vestige of the old jazz remaining on America's famous "swing street."

The clarinet is played by the "heir" of the jazzmen, a 21-year-old musician named Bob Wilbur. Wilbur is an occasional performer at Jimmy Ryan's, final jazz haven on 52nd Street.

A few blocks away from "swing street"—in the tinseled tourist traps on Broadway—the new school of jazz called bebop has struck the fancy of the cultists and driven most of the old jazz musicians to cover. But Wilbur plays on.

Elsewhere in the U. S. the old jazz is still going strong despite the inroads made by sweet music and bebop. In Chicago—and in Boston—the old masters are as popular as ever, and throughout the West their recordings still sell well. But today it seems that when the old masters go, only Wilbur will remain.

'Sweet Music' Dethrones Jazz

Jazz came a long way before it began its decline. Born 175 years ago in New Orleans' Congo Square, it is based on the primitive four-point beat of jungle rhythm. Refined through the years, it took the nation by storm shortly after World War I when torrents of hot music began to splash out of Memphis, New Orleans and Chicago.

Then, slowly, came a change. The white bands from the West began to soften up on their beat and "sweet music" dance orchestras (such as Guy Lombardo's and Vaughn Monroe's) came into favor. Then, more recently, bebop was born. To some Americans it's wonderful stuff; to others it's horrible.

Bebop, according to its adherents, is a revolt by Negro musicians against what they believe is an art form representative of a "weaker" generation. It departs from traditional music by replacing the old four-beat measure with an irregular rhythm pattern in which the beats are present but almost always unidentifiable.

The fans who go to Ryan's smoky little cavern are the Old Guard of jazz. There, nearly every Monday night they hold a jam session, playing High Society, Jack the Bellboy, East

At 21, Bob Wilbur is a veteran hot clarinetist and one of the last recruits to New Orleans jazz.

At New York's Central Plaza, addicts of traditional jazz can still hear it played.

St. Louis Toodle-Doo–and It Must Be Jelly 'Cause Jam Don't Shake Like That.

Wilbur began to play at Ryan's shortly before his 18th birthday. At 16 he had started to skip classes at Scarsdale, N. Y., High School in order to take clarinet and saxophone lessons from the old New Orleans jazz master, Sidney (Pops) Bechet.

He Can Blow It Now

"He wanted to play real bad," Pops recalls, "but he couldn't. He acted like he thought that clarinet would blow itself. But he kept coming along and, man, he can really blow it now."

In six months Wilbur's clarinet had "come along" so far it sounded just like Pops'. Then he went back to Scarsdale, formed a band. Within a year Bob Wilbur's Wildcats were playing at Ryan's.

"They went over big," says Pops Bechet. "Those people at Ryan's–they hadn't seen a hot young band like that in twenty years." This was in 1946.

By 1948, however, the old jazz had gone so far downhill that the original Wildcats broke up. Wilbur played at a jazz festival on the French Riviera, returned and restaffed his band with four old-time New Orleans jazzmen, played at New York's Central Plaza (see above) and then opened at Boston's Savoy Ballroom and played there six weeks.

"I don't know," he reflects, "I just couldn't get the old music out of my system."

Last fall Wilbur returned to the Savoy for another run and he's back there now, playing his third engagement.

"They like us in Boston," he says. "We go over bigger than the Bops in Boston."

Despite the present low estate of the old jazz, Wilbur feels that ragtime will soon come back. In the near future, he believes, all the old stands will reopen and a man once again will hear the strains of Jam With Bacon, Bald Headed Mama, Bundle of Blues and Bugle Call Rag bursting out into the night.

Old Guards always die hard, and Wilbur is no exception. "Bebop is all right," he says, "but it's played from the head. The old jazz is played from the heart–and that kind of music is never going to die." Like a lot of other jazz addicts, he stoutly believes it.

WITH HIS MENTOR, the veteran Pops Bechet, Wilbur warms up on East St. Louis Toodle-Doo.

WIFE RICKY guards Wilbur's health. They were married in 1948 during jazz festival in France.

CABANAS ARE BECOMING A NEW WAY of American life.

All up and down the Atlantic coast, and especially at Miami Beach, Fla., where these pictures were taken, the little beach cabins with the Spanish name are fast becoming more popular. Miami Beach alone has 1,400. Even businessmen now use them for office work (see photos).

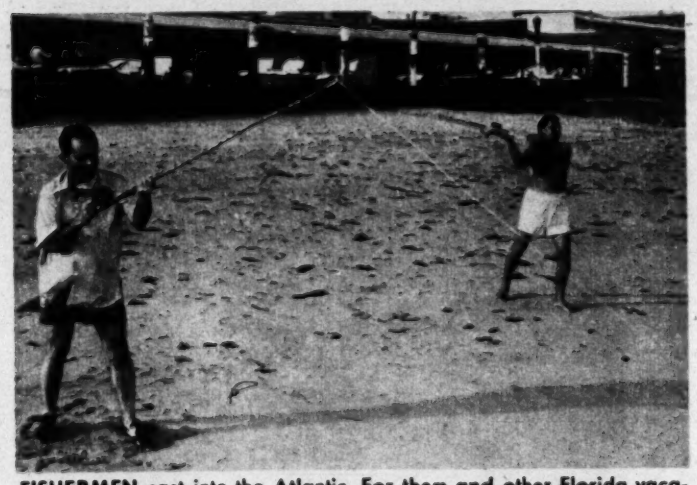
Some cabanas are separate little cottages with all modern developments; others, like the one at top left, come in apartment groups. Usually they rent from $50 to $125 a week and are affiliated with clubs or hotels. Some are for day relaxation only—super bath houses. Others have beds and kitchenettes. Mothers and children sometimes spend whole months in them.

In a small way cabanas are a revolution in pleasant living. They are doing for beach life what motels have done for motoring.

LUNCH is delivered from hotel kitchen to cabana by waiter James Noguera.

THIRSTY? No need to go farther than your cabana for a cool drink. Some cabanas have refrigerators, others have complete kitchenettes.

DANCERS sunbathe to music. To cool off, they have a choice of either salt-water pool or ocean.



FISHERMEN cast into the Atlantic. For them and other Florida vacationers, the cabana is a handy substitute for an ocean-front home.
